Foreword

This work would not have been possible without the enormous help and support of many people whom I sincerely want to thank. My journey with Hrómundar saga began a decade ago as I developed my doctoral project proposal while still a postgraduate student at the University of Iceland. Some years later, I defended my doctoral thesis at the University of Copenhagen and undertook the ambitious task of preparing a text-critical edition of three different versions of the story for digital and print publication. Little did I know of the obstacles ahead! Working on various projects at different institutions in three countries during the pandemic, the saga of Hrómundur transformed from a labour of love into a labour of academic activism. Embracing the cliché motivational slogan ‘be the change you want to see’, I chose to make my work openly accessible at the lowest possible cost. I decided against seeking funding to publish my book through a commercial academic publisher, which does not support infrastructure for sharing XML-based digital editions, and restricts access to publicly funded research by placing it behind paywalls, enforcing embargoes, and setting high retail prices. To ensure accessibility for all scholars and students regardless of their background, I decided to make the e-book open access and forego any royalties from physical book sales. I recognise the implications of my decision, as the volume did not benefit from professional typesetting, indexing, and copy-editing, which certainly led to shortcomings that can potentially hinder some readers in assessing the content and research findings presented here. Nevertheless, I believe it is a trade-off worth making for the sake of accessibility and open access.

As is natural with a work so long in the making, some of the material included here has already been presented elsewhere. Sections 1.1 and 1.2 contain material that appeared in ‘When a King of Norway Became a King of Russia: Transmission and Reception of Hrómundar saga Greipssonar in Scholarly Networks of Early Modern Scandinavia’ (Scandinavian Studies 94:3). Section 3.3 contains material published as a book chapter ‘Manuscripts Derived from Printed Editions in the Transmission History of Hrómundar saga Greipssonar’ in Hidden Harmonies. Material from Chapter 4 has been published as ‘Afterlife of a Lost Saga: A Hitherto Unknown Adaptation of the Lost Saga of Hrómundur Gripsson’ (Saga-Book 45).

The completion of this project would not have been possible without the financial support from the Carlsberg Foundation, which funded my two postdoctoral fellowships (grant numbers CF18-500 and CF20-225). Similarly, my current fellowship at the Voltaire Foundation and the Division of Humanities, University of Oxford allowed me to finalise the project and use my research allowance to support the infrastructure maintenance and development work behind the digital editions.

Most importantly, I want to acknowledge the tremendous generosity of the community of manuscript scholars and digital humanists from which I have immensely benefited. Many colleagues at multiple institutions deserve thanks, as mentioned in the acknowledgements of my thesis. Some close colleagues, however, deserve my special thanks: Philip Lavender, Seán Vrieland, Sheryl McDonald, and N. Kivilcim Yavuz. As parts of my thesis evolved into a monograph and the newly completed text-critical edition became an integral part of it, I received valuable comments from Shaun Hughes, Natalie Van Deusen, and Beeke Stegmann, to whom I owe my sincere gratitude. Finally, I also extend thanks to Heather O’Donoghue, Emma Huber, Carolyne Larrington, and Henrike Lähnemann for their support, encouragement, and advice during the final stages of this project. I am also grateful to many other colleagues who were there for me to exchange ideas, or simply share a glass to celebrate successes and drown sorrows, notably my fellow JRFs at Linacre College. The final result is much improved by the contributions of these individuals, but any remaining errors are solely my responsibility.

Last but not least, I would like to thank my family and friends, especially my dearest husband, Böðvar.

Manuscript Transmission

Introduction

The story of Hrómundur, son of Gripur (or Greipur) – a legendary hero from Norway, who, according to the account of Landnámabók, was one of the forefathers of the first Icelandic settlers – exists in many literary manifestations. These manifestations, or adaptations, were created in different periods of time, in different literary styles and genres, and in different languages. With over nine hundred years of transmission and adaptation history, the medieval story of Hrómundur may well be lost, but it is certainly not forgotten. Its adaptation history spans from the year 1119, when the saga was supposedly recited at the famous wedding feast at Reykhólar, to the year 2020, when a musical adaptation of the story was performed by the Faroese Viking metal band Týr together with the Symphony Orchestra of the Faroe Islands.

Throughout the centuries, the story of Hrómundur has gained a special position in the history of Icelandic literature, intriguing early modern antiquarians, lay scholars, and modern researchers. The prose version of the story is traditionally classified as a fornaldarsaga in Icelandic scholarship, or simply as a legendary saga in English scholarship. It appears within this corpus alongside Völsunga saga, which has a famous counterpart in the Middle High German epic poem Nibelungenlied, and Hrólf's saga kraka, which in turn narrates material related to the Anglo-Saxon poems Beowulf and Widsith.<sup>1</sup> The corpus of fornaldarsögur, stories of ancient Nordic heroes, is traditionally associated with Rafn's publication of Fornaldar sögur Nordrlanda eptir gömlum handritum, but as recently demonstrated by Lavender, its origins draw widely from the scholarly activity of earlier scholars, such as Erik Julius Björner (1696–1750) and Peter Erasmus Müller (1776–1834).<sup>2</sup>

Unlike Völsunga or Hrólf's saga, Hrómundar saga Gr(e)ipssonar (henceforth HsG) owes its popularity not to well-known counterparts outside of Scandinavia but to the references within the Old Norse–Icelandic literary corpus.<sup>3</sup> It is known from the famous passage in Porgils saga og Hafliða (PsH), a part of the Sturlunga compil-

2. Lavender, ‘The Secret Prehistory of the Fornaldarsögur’, Björner, Nordiska kämpa dater, Müller, Sagabibliothek, Rafn, Fornaldar sögur Nordrlanda eptir gömlum handritum. For an introduction to the legendary sagas, see Tulinius, ‘Sagas of Icelandic Prehistory’; Driscoll, ‘A New Edition of Fornaldarsögur Norðurlanda, Some Basic Questions’; Aðalheiður Guðmundsdóttir, Handan Hindarfjalls. There were various attempts to sub-categorise fornaldarsögur, for example, Reuschel, Untersuchungen über Stoff und Stil der Fornaldarsaga; Hermann Pálsson, ‘Fornaldarsögur’; re-defin the corpus, for example, Quinn, ‘Interrogating Genre in the Fornaldarsögur: Round-Table Discussion’; but also to group selected legendary sagas and romances on diff rent criteria, for example, Kalinke, Bridal-Quest Romance in Medieval Iceland; Tulinius, ‘Kynjasögur úr fortíð og framandi löndum’. The term Fornaldarsögur Norðurlanda, however, still functions as a terminus technicus and HsG is usually included in this corpus.

3. In the present study, the story of Hrómundur is referenced under the title of Hrómundar saga Gr(e)ipssonar, with an ‘e’ borrowed from Holtsmark, ‘Helgediktlingen’. This decision was made because all known manuscripts of the seventeenth-century saga call Hrómundur’s father ‘Greipur’ not ‘Gripur’ thus the saga is called ‘Hrómundar saga Greipssonar’. In recent literature, the saga is known by the title ‘Hrómundar saga Gripssonar’, and this title was used in the popular edition of the saga by Guðni Jónsson (1954–59). It is clear from the material available to us today that the name of our hero was not fix d. If we are ready to connect the name of our hero with the Norwegian ancestor of the firs settlers, we should take into account, for example, the evidence of Landnámbók which mentions ‘Hrómundur Gripsson’ (see Finnur Jónsson, Landnámbók, 6, 131). Also, all editions of Porgils saga og Hafliða (PsH), which contains one of the oldest references to Hrómundur, agree on ‘Gripsson’, but none of the medieval manuscripts of PsH actually preserves the passage in which HsG is mentioned. Króksfjarðarbók (AM 122 a fol.) and Reykjafjarðarbók (AM 122 b fol.) are both defective in this part (see Brown, Porgils saga ok Hafliða, liii). The text of PsH is edited from the post-medieval manuscripts, some of which preserve the name ‘Greipur’ (e.g. BL Add. 11127, f. 7v ‘Greypssonar’), others ‘Gripur’ (e.g. AM 114 fol., f. 9r: ‘Grýpsijnie’) (see Guðbrandur Vigfússon, Sturlunga saga Including The Islendinga Saga of Lawman Sturla Thordsson and Other Works, 19; Kálund, Sturlunga Saga eftir membranen Króksfjarðarbók udfyldt eftir Reykjafjarðarbók, 22). The manuscripts of the rímur, with the exception of Acc. 22, however, agree that the name of Hrómundur’s father was ‘Gripur’ not ‘Greipur’. The title of the rímur, Griplur, speaks in favour of the name being ‘Gripur’.

ation,<sup>4</sup> which mentions the story of Hrómundur in its account of the events that took place in 1119. According to PsH, some story about Hrómundur was recited to entertain guests attending a wedding feast in Reykhólar in the north-western part of Iceland:

Hrólfr af Skálmarnesi sagði soga frá Hrø[n]gviði víkingi ok frá Ólafi liðmannakonungi ok haugbroti Þráins berserks ok Hrómundi Gripssyni, ok margar vísur með. En þessarri soga var skemt Sverri konungi, ok kallaði hann síkar lygisqgur skemtiligastar. Ok þó kunnu menn at telja aettir sínar til Hrómundar Gripssonar. Þessa soga hafði Hrólfr sjálfur samansetta.<sup>5</sup>

Hrólfur from Skálmarnes told a saga about Hröngviður the viking and about Ólafur liðmannakonungur and the mound-breaking of Þráinn the berserk and Hrómundur Gripsson, with many verses in it. This story was used to entertain King Sverrir and he considered such lying sagas the most amusing. And even though men can trace their genealogies to Hrómundur Gripsson. This saga was composed by Hrólfur himself.<sup>6</sup>

Because of its assumed medieval origins, HsG and related materials received a remarkable amount of scholarly attention and earned a unique position in the history of Icelandic literature as the 5. Brown, Porgils saga ok Haflíða, 17–18. Since the two oldest manuscripts of Sturlunga saga, AM 122 a fol. and AM 122 b fol., are both defective in this part of the text, this passage has been reconstructed from other manuscripts derived from the two. My examination of the texts appearing closest to the top of Kálund's stemma (Kálund, 'Om håndskrifter af Sturlunga saga og dennes enkelte bestanddele', 283) reveals that only the manuscripts derived from AM 122 b fol. contain the final sentence of this passage, in which Hrólfur is identified as the saga's author (BL Add. 11127, f. 7v and AM 440 4to, 12v); the manuscripts derived from AM 122 a fol. do not contain this sentence (AM 114 fol., f. 9r and AM 115 fol., f. 12r). This was already indicated in the 1817 edition (see Bjarni Þorsteinsson et al., Sturlunga-Saga Edr Islendinga-saga Hin Mikla, I:23), where the sentence appears as an addition in the variant apparatus, cf. Guðbrandur Vigfússon, Sturlunga saga Including The Islendinga Saga of Lawman Sturla Thordsson and Other Works, I:19; Kálund, Sturlunga Saga efter membranen Króksfjarðarbók udfyldt efter Reykjarfjarðarbók, I:22; Guðrún Ása Grímsdóttir and Þórdur Ingi Guðjónsson, Sturlunga saga eða Íslendinga sagan mikla, I:32.

oldest fornaldarsaga to be mentioned by name.<sup>7</sup> It earned an entry in major reference works on medieval literature and culture, such as Medieval Scandinavia: An Encyclopedia (1993) and Dictionary of the Middle Ages (1982–89), in which there are no references to other post-medieval rímur-based legendary sagas. In his history of Icelandic literature, Finnur Jónsson writes about HsG: ‘Alt i alt hører denne saga til de interessanteste og mest betydende’ (All in all, this saga belongs to the most interesting and the most important ones).<sup>8</sup> Since then, HsG has been frequently referenced in the discussion of the origins of the legendary sagas, oral and written forms of the sagas’ transmission, and indirectly in the discussion of the credibility of the legendary sagas,<sup>9</sup> making it probably the best-known example of lost Old Norse-Icelandic sagas.<sup>10</sup>

broadly as literature which might never have had a written existence and circulated only in oral form, or, in a more narrow sense, as written literature which did not survive in manuscript form.<sup>12</sup> **HsG* is by no means a unique example of a lost medieval work. Due to external forces, among them library fires and widespread recycling of writing support, many medieval manuscripts are lost, and with them, a fair amount of medieval stories are lost beyond retrieval. Recent estimates focusing on the extent of loss of medieval narrative fiction suggest that over 20% of chivalric and heroic narratives in Old Norse-Icelandic got lost over the centuries.<sup>13</sup> Mitchell, in his Heroic Sagas and Ballads, lists thirteen probable lost legendary sagas, and HsG is one of them.<sup>14</sup>

It is impossible to prove whether **HsG* had a written manifestation in the Middle Ages, but there are multiple references to Hrómundur Gr(e)ipsson in other medieval works, including, Landnámabók, Flóamanna saga, Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar, Hálfss saga og Hálfrekka, Hversu Nóregur hygðist (Frá Fornjóti og hans ættmönnum), and Göngu-Hrólfs saga. Therefore, we can safely assume that a story, or an ‘immanent saga’, about the events narrated in HsG existed already in the Middle Ages.<sup>15</sup>

Similar material to that of HsG is utilised in the Scandinavian ballads, in Danish Rigen Rambolt og Aller hin stærke, Ungen Ranild<sup>16</sup>

Of the sagas listed by Mitchell, four sagas have received scholarly attention: Ásmundar saga Flagðagæfu (Jesch, ‘Ásmundar Saga Flagðagæfu’); Úlfhams saga (Aðalheiður Guðmundsdóttir, Úlfhams saga); Huldar saga (Driscoll, ‘Pleasure and Pastime: The Manuscripts of Guðbrandur Sturlaugsson á Hvítadal’); and Illuga saga eldhússgóða (Lavender, ‘Illuga saga as fornaldarsaga, riddarasaga and Íslendingasaga: Generic Fluidity in the Late Development of Sagas and rímur’).

and Ramund,<sup>17</sup> Norwegian Ramund den unge,<sup>18</sup> and Swedish Ramunder.<sup>19</sup> It is possible that the source of these ballads lies in the lost *HsG, referred to in PsH.<sup>20</sup> The most recent adaptation of the story can be found in a song Ramund hin unge released on the album Eric the Red in 2003 by the Faroese Viking metal band Týr.<sup>21</sup> The song is based on the Danish ballad Ramund and is sung in the so-called ‘gøtudanskt’, Danish pronounced with a thick Faroese accent.<sup>22</sup>

The Icelandic tradition of the story of Hrómundur includes a medieval metric manifestation of the story called Griplur, or Hrómundar rímur Gripssonar,<sup>23</sup> a seventeenth-century prose manifestation of the story called Hrómundar saga Greipssonar (17HsG),<sup>24</sup> a post-medieval metric adaptation called Hrómundar kvæði Gripssonar,<sup>25</sup> a nineteenth-century prose manifestation also called Hrómundar saga Greipssonar (19HsG),<sup>26</sup> and a nineteenth-century versification called Hrómundar rímur Greipssonar, or Rímur af Hrómundi Greipssyni.<sup>27</sup> Of these, only Griplur and the seventeenth-century saga have been previously edited. The rímur of Hrómundur have been edited twice by Finnur Jónsson in 1896

The earliest edition of 17HsG appeared in 1737, when Erik Julius Björner (1696–1750), a Swedish scholar and philologist,<sup>29</sup> included it in his Nordiska kämpa dater.<sup>30</sup> This edition presents the Icelandic text of Papp. fol. nr 67, held in the Royal Library (Kungliga biblioteket) in Stockholm (P67) accompanied by Latin and Swedish translations.<sup>31</sup> There is no variant apparatus or critical commentary and editorial changes are very limited. The noteworthy exception is the division of the saga into ten chapters, even though the text of 17HsG in P67 is divided into five chapters.

Almost a hundred years later, in 1829–30, Carl Christian Rafn (1795–1864), a Danish philologist,<sup>32</sup> published his collection of legendary sagas called Fornaldar sögur Nordrlanda eptir gömlum handritum, in which 17HsG appears in the second volume. The main text of the edition follows AM 587 b 4to (A587), held today in the Árni Magnússon Institute for Icelandic Studies (Stofnun Árna Magnússonar í íslenskum fræðum) in Reykjavík. The text is accompanied by a very sparse variant apparatus including the readings from Björner's edition and AM 345 4to (A345), another manuscript held in Stofnun Árna Magnússonar. In his brief introduction, Rafn discusses the relationships between witnesses of the saga known to him. It is worth mentioning that Rafn did not know about AM 601 b 4to (A601), also held in Stofnun Árna Magnússonar, which preserves the best text of the saga and which serves as the basis for my edition of 17HsG.

The text of Rafn's edition served as the basis for all the popular editions. These include the 1886–91 edition by Valdimar Ásmundarson (1852–1902),<sup>33</sup> the 1943–44 edition by Bjarni

The notable exception is the 1943–44 edition, where the title changed from Hrómundar saga Greipssonar and Saga af Hrómundi Greipssyni to Hrómundar saga Gripssonar, which influenced how the saga is referred to in later scholarship. In Guðni Jónsson’s edition from 1954–59, the subsequent chapters of the saga received short titles reflecting their contents.<sup>36</sup> Guðni Jónsson’s edition was later digitised for Netútgáfan and published online in 2000.<sup>37</sup>

The earliest published translations of the saga are Björner’s (1737) Latin and Swedish translations, which appeared alongside the Icelandic text.<sup>38</sup> Much later, the saga was translated into Danish by Rafn and published in 1821–26, and again in 1829–30 with minor revisions.<sup>39</sup> The earliest English translation was published in 1921 by Kershaw in her overview Stories and Ballads of the Far Past. Since then, multiple English translations, of varied value, have appeared, as well as recent translations into German, Norwegian and Spanish.<sup>40</sup>

Meanwhile, little effort has been put in recent scholarship to examine the textual transmission of the saga in extant manuscripts or to prepare a modern critical edition.<sup>41</sup> This is despite the fact that 17HsG became part of the curriculum in Icelandic language and literature, Íslenska 303, in one of the secondary schools in Reykjavík, where it was chosen as representative of the corpus of fornaldarsögur.<sup>42</sup> While this fate is not uncommon for many legendary sagas, the state of research has been criticised by Jürg Glauser and Stephen Tranter already some thirty years ago. They observed that the state of scholarship in Old Norse-Icelandic studies regarding the transmission history of, for example, fornaldarsögur and riddarasögur is below desirable:

[I]t must seem strange to note that such important basic research as editions of texts, examinations of transmission, genre delineations, analyses of production and reception and presentations of the texts within their social, historical and cultural contexts is, where the important groups of fourteenth- to sixteenth-century texts are concerned, more or less completely lacking.<sup>43</sup>

Glauser and Tranter have additionally pointed out that the most urgent priority is for critical editions of, among other sagas, Ketils saga hængs, Gríms saga loðinkinna, Áns saga bogsveigis, Illuga saga Griðarfóstra, and our favourite, HsG.

It is noteworthy that while there has been a number of impressive studies into the transmission and reception of some of the fornaldarsögur,<sup>44</sup> there has been far less activity on the editorial arena.

41. It can be noted that Jón Helgason was clearly interested in the saga and the rímur and was collecting variants from various witnesses, probably in order to determine on which rímur manuscript the prose saga was based. I did not have a chance to study Jón Helgason's notes in detail, but it seems clear to me that he had to be working on HsG at some point in the 1970s, as there is a note dated to 6 June 1976 from the director of the manuscript department of Landsbókasafn, Grímur M. Helgsson (1927–1989), that accompany the photographs of Lbs 1370 8vo, one of the manuscripts of Griplur.

Of the sagas mentioned by Glauser and Tranter, to date only Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra has been the subject of a detailed study of its transmission, culminating in a published edition.<sup>45</sup>

This study responds to these calls for new research on the aforementioned sagas by picking up the exciting story of Hrómundur, son of Greipur (Gripur), which has entertained audiences for nearly a millennium. This study not only provides unique insights into the transmission, reception, and adaptation of the story of Hrómundur in prose but also makes its all known prose manifestations in Icelandic available to the scholarly audience for the first time in a text-critical edition accompanied by an interactive digital representation. The edition is based on research involving all known and publicly available manuscripts preserving the saga, as well as drawing on extensive research into the rímur tradition. Here, I present the saga of Hrómundur at three stages of its development:

Plot summary

HsG, as we know it from modern editions of 17HsG and to a large extent also from Griplur, tells the story of its eponymous hero, who gains enormous fame thanks to his extraordinary bravery and exceptional achievements. The saga begins with the introduction of some of the main characters, starting with King Ólafur and his retainers, Kári and Örnúlfur. Then, Greipur and his wife, Gunnlöð, are introduced, along with their nine sons, including Hrómundur who is the most exceptional of them all. Lastly, Ólafur's advisors, the evil brothers Vóli and Bildur, are mentioned.

One day, King Ólafur sets out on a raiding trip, during which a great sea battle takes place. His men confront a horde of blámenn, led by Hröngviður, who sailed on a beautifully decorated ship and carried his indispensable sword called Brynþvari. As a result of this encounter, both Kári and Örnúlfur die at Hröngviður's hand, and Hrómundur decides to avenge them. He kills Hröngviður and many of his men with a wooden club, after which his opponents surrender. After the battle, Hrómundur finds Helgi, Hröngviður's brother, on one of the ships and not only spares his life but also ensures he is healed, despite Helgi's promise to avenge his brother's death at the earliest convenience.

The next adventure involves Ólafur's troops raiding one of the islands of Suðureyjar, where a man named Máni resides (possibly the Isle of Man, as 19HsG suggests). They learn from him about Práinn the berserk, the former king of Valland, who is buried in a mound along with his great treasures. They receive directions on how to find Práinn's burial mound and set out on a quest to steal his treasure. Upon their arrival, Hrómundur is the only one among Ólafur's men who dares to enter the burial mound and confront the mound-dweller. Their encounter culminates in Hrómundur slaying Práinn, burning his body, and Ólafur's men taking all the great treasures, of which Hrómundur keeps only a ring, a necklace, and a sword named Mistilteinn.

Afterwards, Ólafur and his men return home and Hrómundur becomes very popular due to his bravery. He generously gives a ring to a man named Hrókur, but out of jealousy, Vóli kills Hrókur and steals his ring (note that in Griplur and 19HsG, Hrókur is a dog who is killed by the evil brothers). Here, Ólafur's sisters, Svanhvít and Dagný, are introduced. Hrómundur and Svanhvít see each other frequently, while the evil brothers Vóli and Bildur plot against Hrómundur. Hrómundur falls out of the king's favour and is forced to flee the kingdom and stays with his father. Meanwhile, two Swedish kings, both called Halldingur (or Haddingur in Griplur), challenge Ólafur to a battle on the frozen lake Vænir. Now, Ólafur wants Hrómundur to join his army, but Hrómundur rejects the invitation. Eventually, Svanhvít convinces him to go and gives him a shield that is supposed to protect him.

When Hrómundur and his brothers arrive at the battlefield Bildur has already been killed, while Vóli's whereabouts are unknown. The following morning, Hrómundur refuses to go to the battle because he had a bad dream. His brothers, however, decide to go anyway. Helgi, Hröngviður's brother, is in the battle fighting on the Swedish side. He is accompanied by his shape-shifting mistress, Kára (or Lára in Rafn's edition), who flies over the battlefield in the shape of a swan, uttering magic howls that render men defenceless. Thanks to her help, Helgi kills all of Hrómundur's brothers. When Hrómundur learns of his brothers' deaths, he joins the battle and fights Helgi. During their fierce combat, Helgi unintentionally kills Kára, and without her magical support, Hrómundur succeeds in killing him. Afterwards, suddenly, Vóli emerges on the battlefield and confronts Hrómundur, who manages to kill Vóli, but during the fight loses his sword Mistilteinn in the lake. He is badly wounded and regrets his losses, blaming himself for not heeding Svanhvít's advice.

Meanwhile, Svanhvít and her sister are somehow summoned to come and sew Hrómundur's wounds and they ask Hagall and his wife to take care of Hrómundur. One day, Hagall finds Hrómundur's sword inside a fish he catches and returns it to Hrómundur. Soon after, Halldingur finds out from his advisor, Blindur, that Hrómundur is responsible for Helgi's death and is hiding in his kingdom. The king orders Blindur to find Hrómundur, but the task proves quite difficult due to Hagall and his wife's efforts to hide Hrómundur.

The following winter, Blindur experiences a series of prophetic dreams. He shares these dreams with King Halldingur, asking him to interpret their meaning. Despite their obvious ominous nature, the king misinterprets all of them, except the final dream foreseeing the death of both Blindur and Halldingur. Meanwhile, Hrómundur fully recovers at Hagall's place, and when Ólafur and his army raid Sweden, Hrómundur joins them. They storm the stronghold of King Halldingur, and Hrómundur kills him in revenge for his brothers' deaths. Afterwards, Blindur is hanged, thus fulfilling his prophetic dreams. Hrómundur marries Svanhvít, and they live happily ever after.

How closely the lost medieval **HsG* resembled the story as we know it today is impossible to tell. According to Porgils saga og Haflidiða (PsH), as quoted above, one of the stories told at the wedding feast in 1119 was about Hröngviður, King Ólafur, breaking into Práinn's burial mound, and Hrómundur Gr(e)ipsson, so it dealt with some characters and events known from the saga, as known from modern editions. As seen in the brief summary of 17HsG presented above, some episodes are not mentioned in PsH. Among these, for example, are the episodes with Helgi hinn frækni and Blindur's dreams, which might be later additions.<sup>47</sup> At the same time, it is difficult to expect such a brief mention of the story to be exhaustive in regard to the main episodes of the saga. Nevertheless, both Helgi and his mistress Kára, as well as Blindur and his prophetic dreams were part of the story of Hrómundur already in the second half of the fourteenth century when the rímur of Hró-

Manuscripts

The prose adaptations of Hrómundar saga are preserved in forty manuscripts, including translations and excerpts. Of these, thirty-five preserve the Icelandic text, but one of these manuscripts is in a private collection and was not available for examination. Therefore, this study is based on thirty-four manuscripts which are held in public repositories.<sup>50</sup>

All the manuscripts are written on paper and date from the late seventeenth to the nineteenth century. Most of them are held in Icelandic repositories: in the National and University Library of Iceland (Landsbókasafn Íslands) in Reykjavík (18), the Árni Magnússon Institute for Icelandic Studies (Stofnun Árna Magnússonar í íslenskum fræðum) in Reykjavík (5), and the archives of Akureyri and Eyjafjarðarsýla (Héraðsskjalasafn Akureyrarbæjar og Eyjafjarðarsýlu) in Akureyri (1). The remaining ten manuscripts are held outside Iceland: in the British Library in London, UK (4), the Berlin State Library (Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin, Preußischer Kulturbesitz) in Berlin, Germany (2), the Royal Library (Det Kongelige Bibliotek) in Copenhagen, Denmark (2), the Arnamagnæan Institute (Den Arnamagnæanske Håndskriftsamling) in Copenhagen, Denmark (1), and the National Library of Sweden (Kungliga biblioteket) in Stockholm (1). Four of these manuscripts preserve the younger saga (19HsG) and are discussed in Chapter 4. The remaining thirty manuscripts contain the seventeenth-century saga (17HsG), which are discussed in Chapters 2 and 3. Two of these thirty, however, preserve a version of the story, which due to extensive changes in the text, has been edited here separately, as the eighteenth-century version (18HsG). They are discussed in Section 3.2.

Searching for the saga of Hrómundur

1.1 Historical background

Because of its medieval origins and the historical relevance of Hrómundur as a forefather of the first settlers of Iceland, Hrómundar saga (HsG) has attracted a fair amount of scholarly attention over the past four centuries. The composition of the prose saga itself was probably a result of the antiquarian interest in the story recited at the wedding feast in 1119 among the learned men of Scandinavia, such as Þormóður Torfason (1636–1719) (Torfæus), a prolific historiographer of the kingdom of Denmark-Norway, and Árni Magnússon, the famous book collector and professor of Philosophy and Danish Antiquities at the University of Copenhagen.<sup>1</sup> The oldest extant version of the story about Hrómundur in prose, the seventeenth-century saga (17*HsG*), was based on the medieval rímur and composed in the second half of the seventeenth century. The man responsible for this prose composition was Jón Eggertsson (ca. 1643–1689), an Icelandic scribe, poet, and book collector for the Swedish Society of Antiquities, Antikvitetskollegium.<sup>2</sup>

At the time when the Kingdom of Denmark-Norway and the Kingdom of Sweden were engaged in a series of bloody wars over the dominium maris baltici,<sup>3</sup> the historical and antiquarian interest in Old Norse-Icelandic literature in Scandinavia began to grow. Until the end of the sixteenth and the beginning of the seventeenth century, when Danish scholars re-discovered the Icelandic sources, Old Norse-Icelandic literature was largely forgotten in Denmark and arguably also neglected in Iceland. As Margrét Eggertsdóttir recently summarised, the impulse for the rise of Icelandic interest in their heritage came from Denmark:

At that time Icelanders became increasingly interested in their own history and cultural inheritance, not least their old manuscripts. Their interest may be traced to the influence of Danish scholars who, touched by the spirit of humanism, had come to understand the value of Icelandic vellums as sources, and the need to have these texts transcribed and published, complete with translations and commentaries.<sup>4</sup>

In Denmark, this period is characterised by the intensified search for historical sources for the history of Denmark. As Ellen Jørgensen concluded, the seventeenth century was:

en Periode der karakteriseres ved Stofindsamlingen i stor Stil, ved dristige nye Anslag og en Kritik, der voxer frem af de Modsigelser, der aabenbarer sig i Kildematerialet. Det 17. Aarhundrede er en Landnamstid for historisk Forskning ligesom for Filosofi og Naturvidenskab. [...] Stofindsamlingen gjaldt i første Række de litterære Kilder til Danmarks Historie. [...] Blandt de litterære Kilder var der een Gruppe, som Historikerne satte stort Haab til - de islandske Skrifter, der maatte give sikre og sande Efterretninger om vor ældre Historie.<sup>5</sup>

(a period which is characterised by the collection of materials in a grand style, with bold new approaches and a criticism that grows out of the contradictions that reveal themselves in the source material. The seventeenth century is a land taking period for historical research, as well as for philosophy and natural science. The collection of material included, firs and foremost, the literary sources for Denmark's history. Among the literary sources, there was one group, regarding which historians had great hope – the Icelandic writings, which were expected to provide secure and true information concerning our [Danish] older history.)

It is not my aim here to provide an exhaustive overview of the history of Danish historiography, or of the role Old Norse-Icelandic literature played in this period, nor of the competition between Sweden and Denmark for these sources, as detailed overviews already exist.<sup>6</sup> It is, however, necessary to show the general socio-political background of the creation of 17HsG.

When Hrómundar saga appeared in Denmark in the second half of the seventeenth century, the Old Norse-Icelandic sources had been on the Danish historiographical and antiquarian radar for almost a century. The firs known offici letter concerning the collection of antiquarian materials in Iceland was issued on 17 April 1596 by Christian IV (1577–1648), king of Denmark and Norway between 1588 and 1648. In this letter, the king encourages Icelanders to make available to Arngrímur Jónsson (1568–1648) various materials that may be relevant for Niels Krag's (1550–1602) work as the royal historiographer.<sup>7</sup> After that point many Danish scholars looked to Iceland in their searches for sources, but not many could make good use of them, as knowledge of the Old Norse-Icelandic language among Danes was limited.

This lack of general knowledge of the language led to the establishment of the position of royal translator, introduced by Frederik III (1609–1670), the king of Denmark and Norway from 1648 until 1670. The monarch, who instituted absolute monarchy in Denmark-Norway in 1660, became a great patron of research into the past of these two countries. This research was supposed to confirm that both Denmark and Norway not only had a splendid past but also, more importantly, that they were ancient hereditary monarchies.<sup>8</sup> Frederik III appointed an Icelander, Þórarinn Eiríksson (d. 1659), as the royal translator of Nordic antiquities, ‘kongelig translatør af nordiske antikviteter’,<sup>9</sup> and sent him to Iceland in 1656 to collect sources. Þórarinn’s service was not especially fruitful in translations or directly in new acquisitions, since he died soon after his appointment, in 1659.

Shortly after Þórarinn’s appointment, however, Bishop Brynjólfur Sveinsson (1605–1675) sent three parchment manuscripts as a gift to Frederik III: a thirteenth-century manuscript of Grágas (today Reykjavík, Stofnun Árna Magnússonar, GKS 1157 fol.), the fourteenth-century manuscript of kings’ sagas now known as Flateyjarbók (today Reykjavík, Stofnun Árna Magnússonar, GKS 1005 fol.), and a late fourteenth- or early fifteenth-century manuscript of two legendary sagas, Ragnars saga loðbrókar and Völsunga saga (today Copenhagen, Det Kongelige Bibliotek, NKS 1824 b 4to).<sup>10</sup>

In a letter dated to 10 July 1656, Brynjólfur wrote to Villum Lange (1624–1682), tutor of the crown prince Christian, that he was sending these manuscripts to Denmark with the intention that they would be studied, edited, and translated and by that made widely disseminated in Europe. As we can read from his letter, Brynjólfur was opposed to the mere storing of Icelandic manuscripts in foreign libraries and had a clear vision of how the future publications should look like, as well as who should be entrusted with the task:

Tum negotium convertendi homini Islando commendabitur vel Danice, vel si magis placeat Latine, atque iterum edantur per columellas, qvarum una originem ostendat, altera translationem atque sic elaboratae antiquitates in Europam universam, auspiciis septentrionis monarchae magni prodibunt, immortali regis statoris et servatoris sui gloria. [...] At in bibliothecas extereras codices mutos compingere, ubi nullo unquam intelligentur, [...] id vero antivitales non conservare sed extingvere est.<sup>11</sup>

(The work of translating [Old Norse-Icelandic texts] into Danish, or, if that's more pleasing, into Latin, shall be entrusted to an Icelander, and they should be published in columns, of which one presents the original and the other one translation, and in such a way prepared antiquities will go out in the whole Europe under the auspices of the great monarch of the North, to the eternal fame of their protector and preserver. [...] But to shut away mute manuscripts in foreign libraries, where they will never be understood by anyone [...] is in fact not to preserve the antiquities but to destroy them.)

After Þórarinn Eiríksson's death in 1659, another Icelander, Þormóður Torfason, better known under his Latinised name Thormodus Torfæus, was appointed by the king to translate Icelandic sagas into Danish. One of the manuscripts Frederik III had previously received from Brynjólfur Sveinsson, Flateyjarbók, was the basis for the biggest assignment that young Torfæus received: the Danish translation of all the texts preserved in this manuscript. Torfæus' translation, dated to 1661, is preserved in a magnificent manuscript consisting of four volumes: Copenhagen, Det Kongelige Bibliotek, GKS 1015 fol.<sup>12</sup> His translational work was not, however, limited to the kings' sagas, as there are manuscripts preserving his Danish translations of legendary sagas as well, for instance, the impressive volume of over 470 leaves, Copenhagen, Det Kongelige Bibliotek, GKS 1019 fol., which contains among other texts Hrólfs saga kraka, Bósa saga og Herrauðs, and Hálfs saga og Hálfsrekka.

Torfæus' work on the translation of Flateyjarbók must have pleased the monarch, as the following year he was appointed as the royal antiquarian and travelled to Iceland to collect manuscripts for the king. His journey proved successful, since he came back with some of the most important medieval Icelandic manuscripts, including the thirteenth-century codex of kings' sagas known today as Morkinskinna (Copenhagen, Det Kongelige Bibliotek, GKS 1009 fol.), the thirteenth-century codex known today as the Codex Regius of the Elder Edda (Reykjavík, Stofnun Árna Magnússonar, GKS 2365 4to), as well as a fift enth-century codex containing, among other texts, several legendary sagas (Reykjavík, Stofnun Árna Magnússonar, GKS 2845 4to).<sup>13</sup> The contents of these volumes reflect the scholarly interest at the end of the seventeenth century in certain types of Old Norse literature, particularly kings' aagas and legendary sagas.

During his work as a royal translator of Old Norse texts, Torfæus became aware of the differences between the royal genealogies as they are presented by Saxo Grammaticus in his Gesta danorum and their Old Norse alternatives. The king commissioned him to write an account of these differences, which became Series dynastarum et regum Daniæ, first completed in manuscript form in 1664 and published in a highly revised form in 1702.<sup>14</sup> After the completion of this volume, Torfæus, for some unknown reason, lost his privileged position at the Danish court, and one can only speculate what influence the controversial contents of the Series dynastarum might have had on his position. After all, even almost forty years later, when Árni Magnússon was discussing the publication of the volume with Torfæus, he considered its contents problematic and thought that it could be banned.<sup>15</sup> In a letter from 2 October 1700, Árni wrote to Torfæus about the expected reception of the volume by the Danish audience:

(they would consider it inappropriate that we Danes should give others pretext to disbelieve Saxo. It crossed my mind, that it could happen, that your publication would be banned, even though it is censored.)

Whether the contents of Series dynastarum had anything to do with the winding course of Torfæus' scholarly career remains a matter of speculation, especially since already three years later, in 1667, he received another appointment as the royal antiquarian. His offic was, however, not renewed after Frederik III's death, and he had to wait to regain his offi until much later. In 1682, he was appointed the historiographer of the kingdom of Norway 'Historiographus for Kongeriget Norge' with the main assignment to write a complete history of Norway in Latin.<sup>17</sup>

It was under the auspices of Christian V (1646–1699) that Torfæus was able to continue his scholarly enterprise. Christian V took the Danish throne after his father and was the king of Denmark and Norway from 1670 until 1699. He continued his father's ideological program of emphasizing the hereditary character of Danish and Norwegian monarchies and was thus also highly interested in Old Norse-Icelandic material.<sup>18</sup> It is easy to imagine that the Scanian war (1675–79) pushed intellectual activities to the background, as it was not until 1681 that another Icelander appeared in the Danish scholarly landscape in the role of royal antiquarian. This was Hannes Þorleifsson (d. 1682), who was appointed on 7 June 1681 and in the following year sent to Iceland to collect manuscripts. His main assignments were summarised in six points listed in the letter of his appointment. They included preparing selected manuscripts for publication with commentaries; obtaining old and rare manuscripts ('gamle og rare Manuscripter') for the royal library; and writing a complete history of Iceland. In the same letter,

Icelanders were encouraged to make their manuscripts available to Hannes.<sup>19</sup>

The antiquarian activities on the other side of the Øresund were no less intensive. In fact, the earliest editions of the legendary sagas originate in Sweden, not in Denmark. Olof Verelius (1618–1682), with the help of an Icelander, Jón Jónsson from Rúgstaðir (1636–1679), published an edition and a Swedish translation of Gau-treks saga in 1664, followed by a series of other sagas. Only a few years later, in 1667, the Swedish Society of Antiquities (Antikvitetskollegium) was established, and, as will be discussed later, the appearance of HsG can be associated with the activities of this institution. One of the explicit objectives of the Antikvitetskollegium was to collect historical documents that could deliver information regarding Swedish history, including ‘gamble Jssländska och norske manuscriptor’ (old Icelandic and Norwegian manuscripts).<sup>20</sup>

The establishment of the Antikvitetskollegium and the intensification of Swedish interest in Old Norse sources preserved in Iceland probably played a not insignificant role in assuring the re-appointment of Torfæus into the royal service of the Danish-Norwegian king. Torfæus wrote an application to the king in which he emphasised the scale of collecting and editorial activities in Sweden:

hos de Svenske var derimod oprettet et Antiquitets Collegium, forsynet med frit Bogtrykkerie, og en anseelig Indkomst om Aaret. De havde faaet en Islænder, som de rigelig underholdte. De opsgæde og tilhandlede dem alt hvad de kunde overkomme af vore gamle Sager; og havde allerede ved disses hælp faaet udgivne adskillige Skrifter.<sup>21</sup>

The competition for Old Norse-Icelandic sources was in full swing when two men, acting on behalf of the competing monarchies, spent time in Iceland collecting manuscripts in the very same year, 1682: the newly appointed royal antiquarian Hannes Þorleifsson on behalf of Denmark and Jón Eggertsson on behalf of the Swedish Antikvitetskollegium.<sup>22</sup> While Jón Eggertsson managed to obtain a considerable collection of manuscripts, which he sent to Stockholm, Hannes Þorleifsson's endeavours did not bring new acquisitions to the royal collection, as he, together with the manuscripts he collected, never made it back to Copenhagen.<sup>23</sup> After Hannes Þorleifsson's death, Christian V appointed Thomas Bartholin (1659–1690) as the royal antiquarian, and under his direct influence, the king issued a Royal Decree in 1685, which banned the sale of Icelandic manuscripts abroad.<sup>24</sup> The ban can be seen as a response to the manuscript collecting activities in Iceland of Jón Eggertsson on behalf of the Swedes, which, as Kålund put it, 'matte anses for i høj grad upatriotisk' (may be considered to a high degree unpatriotic).<sup>25</sup>

Thomas Bartholin's letter of appointment issued on 23 February 1683 makes it explicit that Icelandic materials would play a significant role in his scholarly enterprise, as he was required to:

That same year Bartholin met an Icelander, Árni Magnússon, recently enrolled at the University of Copenhagen, whom he hired as his assistant to translate Old Norse texts. Bartholin was also in contact with Jón Eggertsson, who at that time was imprisoned in Copenhagen, and obtained from him some manuscripts. After 1685, Bartholin also stayed in contact with Torfæus, with whom he was discussing various matters of his research.<sup>27</sup> All these men played an important role in the early dissemination of HsG, which will be discussed in the following section.

1.2 Researching the saga before 1800

Scholarly interest in Old Norse-Icelandic literature flourish d throughout the seventeenth century both in Denmark and Sweden. While the most scholarly attention was directed towards the Eddas and the kings' sagas, the legendary sagas, such as HsG, also became increasingly sought after. From extant scholarly correspondence, we know that at least in Denmark at the end of the seventeenth century, there was scholarly interest in the story of Hrómundur. In 1684, Torfæus, who at that time was the royal historiographer tasked with writing a history of Norway, wrote a letter to his acquaintance in Iceland, Reverend Torfi Jónsson (1617–1689), pastor of Gaulverjabær and a nephew of Bishop Brynjólfur Sveinsson. In this letter, Torfæus stated that he needed access to several sagas, which could be useful in his study of royal genealogies. One of the sagas he mentioned is a saga of Hrómundur Greipsson, which he had never seen: ‘því þarf eg öbrigdannlega sógur af Harallde Hilldetón, Amlooda, [...] og af Hromunde Greipssyne sem eg hefe helldur alldrei sied’ (Therefore I need reliable sagas of Haraldur hilditqnn, Amlóði, [...] and of Hrómundur Greipsson, which I have also never seen) (AM 285 b IV fol., f. 13v).

Even though Torfæus lists HsG in his Series dynastarum, as published in 1702,<sup>28</sup> and mentions Hrómundur in his Historia Rerum Norvegicarum,<sup>29</sup> it is not certain at which point he actually received a manuscript copy of the saga. His knowledge of the story of Hrómundur, demonstrated in Historia Rerum Norvegicarum, where he lists Hrómundur as a grandson of Hrókur the black in Book IV, chapters 2 and 14, might have come exclusively from secondary sources. Torfæus was after all very well versed in Icelandic sources, as attested in the same letter:

Enn i Gaungu Hrólfs Historiu sem ätte ad wera sonur Sturlaug (allt ef þad er sä same Sturlaugur) stendur ad Olafur sonur Gaungu Rolfs, sem atte ad wera Kongur i Danmórk, hefde haff hiä sier Hromund Greipþon, Enn nær Hromundur Greipsson war, weit eg wel, þvi hann var langafe Jngolfs, sem Ißland firs bidge, og dottur sonur Hroks swarta, sem war Eirn af Hälfs Reckum (AM 285 b IV fol., f. 12v)

(But in the saga of Göngu-Hrólfur, who was supposed to be a son of Sturlaugur (if this is the same Sturlaugur), it is written that Ólafur, son of Göngu-Hrólfur, who was supposed to be a king in Denmark, had with him Hrómundur Greipsson. And I know very well when Hrómundur Greipsson was [alive], because he was a great-grandfather of Ingólfur, who was the firs to settle Iceland, and a maternal grandson of Hrókur the Black, who was one of Hálfur's champions.)

None of these pieces of information about Hrómundur had to come directly from 17*HsG*. The information about Ólafur being king of Denmark, and his relationship to Göngu-Hrólfur could be based on Göngu-Hrólfs saga,<sup>30</sup> while the information about Hrómundur being a great-grandfather of Ingólfur could have come from Landnámabók,<sup>31</sup> or secondarily from Flóamanna saga.<sup>32</sup> Finally, Hrómundur's relationship to Hrókur the Black is also mentioned in Hálf's saga og Hálfssrekka.<sup>33</sup> Because of this intertextual context in which Hrómundur Greipsson appears, Torfæus could have equally well included Hrómundur in his genealogies without having access to any actual copy of HsG.

At some point, however, Torfæus must have received a manuscript containing the prose version of the story, as there are two manuscripts preserving 17HsG with marginalia written in his hand. Both manuscripts are today part of the Árnamagnæan collection and are held in Reykjavík, AM 193 e fol. and AM 587 b 4to (see manuscript descriptions in Chapter 2). In both manuscripts, Torfæus comments on the genealogies of the saga characters. One emphasises the similarities between various sagas, while the other highlights the differences. From these marginal notes, it is clear – and not really surprising – that Torfæus, as the royal historiographer, was mainly interested in the genealogies of Danish and Norwegian dynasties. What is worth observing, however, is that 17HsG serves as a source of historical information almost simultaneously with the appearance of the very first manuscripts of the saga. This happens around the same time as Torfæus is given the assignment of writing the history of Norway and when he writes to Torfi Jónsson that he has never seen this saga.

While Hrómundar saga is preserved in over thirty manuscripts, none of them can be dated further back in time than the second half of the seventeenth century. Textual analysis reveals that all extant texts of 17HsG, as preserved in these manuscripts, are descended from a single manuscript, AM 601 b 4to, which is written in Jón Eggertsson's hand (see discussion in Chapter 2). This is the same infamous Jón Eggertsson mentioned in the previous section, who was collecting manuscripts in Iceland in 1682 for the Swedish Antikvitetskollegium. Moreover, it has been previously suggested that Jón Eggertsson was the author of 17HsG.<sup>34</sup> Given the important role of Jón Eggertsson in the creation of the saga, it seems very likely that the reappearance of the long-lost saga in Denmark had something to do with the antiquarian and historical interest in Old Norse-Icelandic sources, which was so characteristic of this period. As the following section will demonstrate, the activity of Jón Eggertsson can be seen as a response to this contemporary interest.

Even though theoretically the possibility cannot be excluded that Jón gained access to some manuscript preserving 17HsG during his stay in Iceland in 1682 and decided to copy it, it seems unlikely given the circumstances. After his journey to Iceland, Jón prepared a report of his expenses for the Antikvitetskollegium. This report includes a list of manuscripts he brought with him, and on this list, there is a manuscript which contained six sets of rímur. It is described as follows:

Een bog, indeholder Riimer, gammel, 1. Remunds Rimer 24. 2. Vilhialms Rimur 20. 3. Eigill Skallagryms Sonar R. 40. 4. Hromundar Greips Sonar R. 6. 5. Bragda Ølvers Rymur 6. 6. Skotlands Rymur. 2. R:dr.<sup>35</sup>

From this description, it is clear that Jón obtained a volume, which I refer to as *JE 27 4to,<sup>36</sup> which contained Hrómundar rímur Greipssonar, i.e. the metric version of the story, rather than the prose version. *JE 27 4to is now lost, and it cannot be excluded that it perished in the fire of Stockholm castle in 1697, as many other manuscripts did.<sup>37</sup> Between 1684 and 1687, Jón Eggertsson was imprisoned in Copenhagen, where he was copying various texts for his Swedish customers, but also kept regular contact with Danish scholars, including Thomas Bartholin and Árni Magnússon.<sup>38</sup> Given the antiquarian interest of people such as Torfæus in stories like HsG, it seems highly possible that Jón Eggertsson converted the rímur that he obtained in 1682 into prose, in order to meet this contemporary antiquarian need.

From the perspective of the transmission history of 17HsG, it is important to observe that *JE 27 4to contained, among other sets of rímur, Bragða-Ölvis rímur, which appeared in the manuscript immediately after Hrómundar rímur. AM 601 b 4to, on the other hand, preserves not only the best text of 17HsG, but also, according to Hooper, the best text of the prosification of Bragða-Ölvis rímur, known as Bragða-Ölvis saga.<sup>39</sup> It would be an unlikely coincidence for two prosifications of two poems, which appear together in a single rímur manuscript, to also appear in a single saga manuscript. Given the timing and circumstances, it seems highly probable that Jón Eggertsson was responsible for converting both sets of rímur into prose. Árni Magnússon, in fact, was convinced that Jón Eggertsson had something to do with 17HsG, when he called it in his notes an ‘imposture’ or fabrication, which was widely repeated in the later scholarship.

38. Jón Eggertsson was imprisoned in April 1684. The reasons for this are unclear, as the legal records of the city of Copenhagen for this period are lost. In his lifetime, Jón was accused of various things, including witchcraft, travelling abroad without valid documents, tax fraud, etc. In January 1685, he was found guilty of tax fraud. In his correspondence with the Antikvitetskollegium, however, Jón pointed towards his service for the Swedish society as the cause of his misfortune. sent to him. And it is true. It is with certainty an imposture of Jón Eggertsson.<sup>41</sup>

From this note, we learn not only that Árni Magnússon considered 17HsG a fabrication, but also that it was worthless for Torfæus. This statement is especially relevant in the context of the marginalia in Torfæus' hand which accompany 17HsG in his manuscripts, as well as his scholarly correspondence regarding this saga. It seems that Torfæus first asked Torfi Jónsson about HsG because he believed it would be useful in his research into Danish and Norwegian genealogies, then got hold of the saga and commented in the margins about the genealogical similarities and discrepancies with other sagas, and finally came to the conclusion that 17HsG was worthless, most likely referring to its value as a historical source.

As has been suggested elsewhere, Jón Eggertsson might have written AM 601 b 4to while he was imprisoned in Copenhagen, where he may have had limited access to resources, and this could explain why the paper on which the sagas are written is repurposed from some book of accounts.<sup>42</sup> At the same time, as Jón Eggertsson states in his report to the Swedes, there was a shortage of paper in Iceland at the time when he was there collecting manuscripts and perhaps this is the real reason why he reused sheets of paper to write down HsG and Bragða-Ölvis saga. As Jón Eggertsson writes in his report about one of the manuscripts he delivered: 'Er æj eller Reenskrefuen, fordj der var defect paa papiir udj Iissland, dend Thid' (Not rewritten cleanly because at that time there was a lack of paper in Iceland).<sup>43</sup> This does not need to be completely true, as among Torfæus's correspondence, we can find indication that paper was accessible in Iceland around the same time. In 1684, Torfæus instructs his acquaintance in Iceland, a certain Sigurður Jónsson of Eyrarbakki to provide paper and pay to scribes willing to copy some texts for him, as he writes 'bid hann vilie leggia til pappir, og betala peninga þeim sem vilia skrifa þeßar Historiur firi mig' (AM 285 b IV fol., f. 15r).

But if Jón wrote AM 601 b 4to in Iceland we have to ask why it was not included in his report and why it was not sent to Stockholm with all the other volumes he collected? Bjarni Einarsson speculated that Jón only sent part of the manuscripts he collected in Iceland to Stockholm and kept some manuscripts ‘som pant’ (as collateral).<sup>44</sup> At the same time, he does not exclude the possibility that Jón continued to collect and copy manuscripts in Copenhagen and that is where additional volumes sent to Stockholm at a later date originate from. The second explanation seems more probable, since there appears to be no direct benefit for Jón in sending a few dozen manuscripts to Stockholm and keeping just a few as insurance.

How the transmission history of 17HsG developed in the early years of its existence is not absolutely clear. But considering the network of people involved in the production of the earliest manuscripts, we can put forward a possible hypothesis regarding its circulation. Regardless of whether 17HsG was actually written by Jón Eggertsson while he was imprisoned in Copenhagen, the oldest manuscript of the saga written in his hand (AM 601 b 4to) came at some point into the possession of Árni Magnússon, as it contains extensive marginalia in both men’s hands. As previously mentioned, Árni Magnússon was in contact with Jón Eggertsson during the latter’s imprisonment and the two men were on good terms. It is therefore easy to imagine that AM 601 b 4to came to Árni directly from Jón. According to Bjarni Einarsson, there were two Icelanders who were providing Jón with paper and manuscripts to copy, Helgi Ólafsson and Árni Magnússon himself, bearing witness to the close relationship between Jón and Árni.<sup>45</sup>

As the note by Árni Magnússon quoted above suggests, Torfæus must have received a copy of 17HsG from Árni himself. Both manuscripts that can be confidently affiliated with Torfæus, AM 193 e fol. and AM 587 b 4to, are closely related and textual evidence suggests that AM 193 e fol. is derived from AM 587 b 4to.

After Torfæus’ death in 1719 both manuscripts came into the possession of Árni Magnússon, who in his catalogue noted that AM 193 e fol. was written ‘epter exemplare med hendi Eyolfs Biorns sonar komnu fra mier’ (after an exemplar in Eyjólfur Björnsson’s hand which came from me). This exemplar was most likely AM 587 b 4to, partially written by Eyjólfur. Moreover, it is probably this manuscript that Árni sent to Torfæus, mentioned in the note ‘sú sem eg hafdi sent honum’.

Eyjólfur Björnsson worked for Árni Magnússon in Copenhagen during the years 1687–1689 and collaborated with Ásgeir Jónsson on some manuscripts for Árni until Ásgeir left for Norway with Torfæus in 1688. It is entirely possible that AM 587 b 4to was written by Eyjólfur and Ásgeir in Copenhagen for Árni Magnússon, and that Torfæus then received this manuscript from Árni, possibly shortly after his visit to Copenhagen in 1688, and ordered Ásgeir to copy 17HsG again into AM 193 e fol.<sup>46</sup> This interpretation is in line with Már Jónsson’s observation regarding some manuscripts of kings’ sagas, where Ásgeir produced volumes in folio format for Torfæus and in quarto for Árni. On the one hand we have AM 587 b 4to, which is in quarto format and was most likely written in Copenhagen for Árni Magnússon, and only later came into the possession of Torfæus, and on the other hand we have AM 193 e fol., which is in folio format and was written in Norway for Torfæus.<sup>47</sup>

It is hard not to notice that the time when Ásgeir Jónsson and Eyjólfur Björnsson collaborated in Copenhagen on AM 587 b 4to (1687–1688) overlaps with the time Jón Eggertsson spent in Copenhagen, either in prison or afterwards, before he left to Sweden for his final months (1684–89).<sup>48</sup> As further discussed in Chapter 2, textually it is clear that 17HsG in AM 587 b 4to is derived from AM 601 b 4to, but it is difficult to prove that it is its direct apograph. At the same time, it seems highly probable that the exemplar of the saga copied by Ásgeir and Eyjólfur came from Jón Eggertsson, perhaps through the agency of Árni Magnússon, and thus was possibly AM 601 b 4to itself. These men were part of an Icelandic community in Copenhagen, many of them knew each other personally, so points of contact existed to facilitate such an exchange of manuscripts, and the textual variation in the oldest manuscripts is so minor that it cannot exclude this possibility.

Árni Magnússon's broad scholarly network is probably also responsible for the arrival of 17HsG in Iceland. The three oldest manuscripts of the saga from Iceland were written by Jón Þórðarson in 1695 and at least one of them can be certainly associated with the wealthy Icelandic book collector and commissioner Magnús Jónsson í Vigur (1637–1702). The manuscript in question is British Library, Add. 4859 (B4859),<sup>49</sup> but, according to Jóhann Gunnar Ólafsson, Lbs 222 fol., held at Landsbókasafn Íslands, can also be considered as one of Magnús' manuscripts.<sup>50</sup> The origin of the last manuscript, AM 345 4to, held at Stofnun Árna Magnússonar, is uncertain. Árni Magnússon was in contact with Magnús Jónsson and exchanged books with him, as the correspondence between the two men suggests.<sup>51</sup> Therefore, it is possible that Árni sent Magnús a copy of 17HsG that was derived from AM 601 b 4to and served as an exemplar for at least one of the extant texts in Jón Þórðarson's hand. We know there was at least one more manuscript in Magnús Jónsson's possession that preserved a text of 17HsG. In AM 211 b 4to, which contains various materials associated with Magnús' brother, Sigurður Jónsson (1643–1730), there is a note which lists two manuscripts in quarto, which belonged to Magnús Jónsson but are now lost. The manuscript described as 'Onnur Sögubök M J. S. J 4o' (the second book of Magnús Jónsson in 4to, henceforth *MJ 2 4to) contained, among other sagas, Hrómundar saga and Bragða-

Ölvis saga (AM 211 b 4to, p. 102). According to Jón Helgason,<sup>52</sup> the majority of the materials preserved in AM 211 b 4to are from years 1695–1697, while Kålund dates this manuscript to ca. 1700.<sup>53</sup> Given the chronology, *MJ 2 4to might be the hypothetical missing link between AM 601 b 4to and the manuscripts in Jón Pórðarson's hand.

In this context, it is worth to mention that, as Már Jónsson observed, Magnús Jónsson had to complain in one of his letters to Árni about the fact that he provided more texts for Árni than received in return.<sup>54</sup> Árni Magnússon responded quite defensively in 1691, stating that 'þær sögur er eg idar vinsemd sendt hefi kostad mig meir enn þeir kannski trua kinnud' (the sagas that I sent you have cost me more than you could probably believe). This attests to the exchange of books in both directions, and Árni certainly refers here to the expenses connected to hiring Icelanders in Copenhagen, such as Eyjólfur Björnsson and Ásgeir Jónsson. We cannot know whether 17HsG was among the costly sagas Árni Magnússon sent to Magnús Jónsson, but considering the textual and chronological evidence, this appears to have been a possible scenario, and perhaps the lost *MJ 2 4to was this manuscript.

It is perhaps worth to emphasise here, that 17HsG most likely made its way to Sweden earlier than to Iceland. One of the two autograph manuscripts in Jón Eggertsson's hand, P67, arrived in Stockholm on 9 October 1687 (according to the note on f. 2r). In this manuscript, there are marginalia in the hand of Guðmundur Ólafsson (1652–95), an Icelander who worked as a translator from Old Norse-Icelandic to Latin and Swedish at the Antikvitetskollegium in the period from 1681 until his death in 1695.<sup>55</sup> In his introduction to Sturlaug's saga starfsama, Guðmundur lists a number of reliable sagas, and among them HsG, suggesting that he had already worked with HsG before 1694. Guðmundur was a close collaborator of Johan Hadorph (1630–1693), a Swedish antiquarian, who in turn was also responsible for maintaining contacts with Jón Eggertsson.<sup>56</sup> It is possible that Guðmundur worked on the translation of 17HsG, but no manuscript in his hand is known to me. There is, however, a manuscript preserving an early translation of the saga: Stockholm, Kungliga biblioteket, Papp. fol. 98. According to Gödel, the text of Hrómundar saga in Papp. fol. 98 was written by another Antikvitetskollegiet's translator, Nils Hufvudson Dal (1690–1740).<sup>57</sup> Even though 17HsG was not among the earliest Legendary Sagas published in Sweden, it made it to print relatively shortly after its composition. It appeared in Björner's Nordiska kämpa dater published in Stockholm in 1737, where the Old Norse-Icelandic text was printed side by side with Latin and Swedish translations. The edition is followed by a short commentary, which mentions various references to Hrómundur in Swedish place names, archaeological find , and folklore, thus bearing witness to the Swedish interest in the story about Hrómundur.

This section has demonstrated how the scholarly networks of late seventeenth-century Denmark and beyond overlapped with the scribal network of people responsible for the creation and circulation of Hrómundar saga. It has shown that various scholars in Iceland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden were to a certain extent interested in the story of Hrómundur and involved in the production and dissemination of its earliest manuscripts. The textual relationships among the discussed manuscripts are presented in Chapter 2.

1.3 Researching the saga after 1800

The arbitrary watershed of 1800 is introduced here to separate the early modern, antiquarian enquiries into Hrómundar saga from more systematic, scholarly examinations of its origins and transmission history. Although the resemblance between Erik Julius Björner's approach to the saga in 1737 and the earliest nineteenth-century discussion by Peter Erasmus Müller (1776–1834), discussed below, cannot be overlooked.

The publication of the Danish summary of the saga accompanied by a commentary by Peter Erasmus Müller, a Danish bishop, historian, and linguist, is a manifestation of the long-standing Danish scholarly interest in the saga of Hrómundur, extending into the nineteenth century.<sup>58</sup> Müller already mentioned HsG and its relationship to Porgils saga og Haflíða in his Über den Ursprung und Verfall der isländischen Historiographie, nebst einem Anhange über die Nationalität der altnordischen Gedichte.<sup>59</sup> In Sagabibliothek, Müller further drew scholarly attention to the accounts about Hrómundur found not only in Porgils saga og Haflíða, but also in Landnámaþók, other Icelandic sagas, and some Scandinavian ballads. He was clearly interested in the medieval origins of the story, as suggested by his conclusion that 'Denne Saga er altsaa den ældste islandske, som vi med Vished vide at være opdigtet' (this saga as the oldest Icelandic saga that we with certainty know was composed).<sup>60</sup> At the same time, just as his predecessors, Müller paid no attention to the textual transmission of the saga, or the early modern origins of the 17*HsG*.

The first scholar to draw attention to the similarities between various texts of 17*HsG* was Carl Christian Rafn, who briefly discussed the manuscripts used for his edition in the introduction.<sup>61</sup> Rafn listed three manuscripts of the saga: the already mentioned AM 587 b 4to (A587), AM 193 e fol. (A193), and AM 345 4to (A345), as well as Björner's edition. This suggests that he examined a limited number of manuscripts, focusing on those available to him in Copenhagen. He chose A587 as the basis for the main text of the edition and provided very limited variant apparatus with the selected readings from A345 and Björner's edition. No clear relationship between the manuscripts can be established based on the information provided in the introduction, other than that Rafn considered A193 closely related to A345, which in turn was closely related to Björner's edition.

Some time after the publication of Rafn's edition, Jón Sigurðsson (1811–1879), an Icelandic politician and archivist, showed some interest in the story of Hrómundur.<sup>62</sup> Even though he did not publish anything about HsG in particular, he included information about Griplur in his Rímnatal, which can be found in JS 314 8vo, held in Landsbókasafn Íslands. In JS 314 8vo (f. 264r), he observed that the Griplur are old and based on better manuscripts than the ones used for the edition of the saga. Moreover, in one of his marginal notes accompanying Griplur in JS 55 4to (f. 46r), Jón Sigurðsson drew attention to the relationship between Griplur, 17HsG, and the lost saga mentioned in Porgils saga og Haflíða, but it is unknown how he interpreted the relationships between these works.<sup>63</sup>

The first attempt to evaluate the relationships between the lost saga, Griplur, and 17HsG was undertaken by Eugen Kölbing (1876) in his Beiträge zur Vergleichenden Geschichte der Romantischen Poesie und Prosa des Mittelalters.<sup>64</sup> Kölbing concluded that the seventeenth-century saga is independent from the rímur and they both are derived from a lost medieval saga about Hrómundur. Kölbing did not limit his analysis to the relationships between the rímur and the saga. He also touched upon the matter of the affiliation of the saga texts, as preserved in various manuscripts known to him. He contributed significantly to the research on the HsG tradition by bringing to scholarly attention other manuscripts of the saga not mentioned in Rafn's edition.

From his overview of the material available to him, however, we can clearly see the limitations of his conclusions. Kölbing pointed out that A601 should be taken into consideration while discussing the transmission of 17HsG as it contains some good readings, but at the same time he dismissed A193, based on Rafn's incorrect assessment that its text is almost identical with the text of A345. Kölbing did not have access to A345 to verify Rafn's judgement and had to rely on the limited apparatus of that edition. Kölbing stated that he briefl examined British Library manuscript Sloane 4860 and considered it worthless, while he did not have a chance to consult Swedish translations of the saga in Papp. fol. 98 (P98).<sup>65</sup> Based on this limited material, Kölbing excluded the possibility that any of the examined manuscripts could be a codex optimus of the existing tradition or even a textual ancestor of the other examined manuscripts of 17HsG.<sup>66</sup>

His observations suggest that he greatly relied on Rafn's edition, even regarding the readings of Björner's edition. For example, Kölbing considered 'hverju' missing in A601, but failed to notice that A601 and P67 (or Björner's edition) have actually a diff rent reading: 'einu' instead of 'hverju'. This variant is not included in the apparatus of Rafn's edition, therefore, Kölbing did not know it. Additionally, the reading 'Lára' for 'Kára' suggests that he did not consult A587 either, or he would have noticed that A587 preserved 'Kára', not 'Lára', as Rafn's edition suggested. According to Kölbing, A587, P67 (or rather Björner's edition based on P67), A345, and A601 are independent from each other, and presumably derived from a lost manuscript Y.

Kölbing's conclusions regarding the relationships between manuscripts of the saga were brought into question already by Andrews in 1911. He pointed out the error in Rafn's edition regarding the name of Helgi's mistress, 'Lára'.<sup>67</sup> Additionally, he dismissed as of minor importance the variant 'hverju' for 'einu', on which Kölbing built his argument that A601 cannot be an ancestor of the other manuscripts. Andrews's conclusions went in the opposite direction, rejecting the idea that all the manuscripts are independent from each other. He suggested instead that A601 preserves the original text of the saga and is the ancestor of the entire tradition (and the codex optimus).<sup>68</sup>

Andrews grouped the texts into two branches and presented them in the form of a very basic stemma.<sup>69</sup> On one side, he placed manuscripts in Ásgeir Jónsson's hand A587, A193, and the third unnamed branch which must represent T1768, to which he refers in the text. On the other side, he placed P67 and A345.

Andrews' observations are for the most part correct, but it has to be emphasised that he certainly relied on Björner's edition and not on the actual readings of P67, as he reproduced errors originating from the edition. To mention a few clear examples:

- 370:18: 'lendar' against 'herðar' is an error based on Björner's edition, as P67 (f. 109v:19) preserves 'lendar'.
- 365:16–17: 'Ólafr konungr austr' against 'Ólafr konungr vestr' is an incorrect variant, as the reading vestur in P67 (f. 102v:18) is a later correction made in a different hand. The original austur, still readable, was crossed over and replaced with vestur. This change is important from the perspective of the saga's transmission, to identify manuscripts presumably derived from P67 and preserving the corrected version, but not from the perspective of Andrews' aim to reveal the original. In that case, the original reading of P67 agrees with A587 and A601 against A345, which preserves the reading 'Ólafr norðr'.
- 375:13 'so' against 'hrifjar' should be: 'hrifja so' as preserved in P67 against 'hrifja þar með' in other manuscripts. This reading is registered in Björner's edition, thus it must be Andrews' error.

Therefore, Andrews' stemma omits one of the oldest texts of the saga, the one preserved in P67, which is one of two manuscripts of the saga in Jón Eggertsson's hand. It is worth mentioning that there are also two errors in the readings of A345, which Andrews used for his analysis, which are his misreadings:

- 366:4: 'styrði' against 'réði' in other manuscripts. Even though this reading is unclear, A345 (f. 74v:17) preserves the abbreviated form of 'Rieþe', 69. Andrews, 531.

- 368:10: ‘hit má’ against ‘hann má’, while A345 (f. 75v:2) preserves the abbreviated form of ‘hamn’.

Regarding the relationships between the saga and the rímur, Andrews did not agree with Kölbing either. He saw the saga as a paraphrase of the rímur, but not directly related to any of the known texts of Griplur.

Andrews' analysis of Griplur was based on Finnur Jónsson's edition from 1896, in which Finnur Jónsson used exclusively AM 610 c 4to, AM 146 a 8vo, and AM 387 fol.. The latter was treated as a reliable copy of Cod. Guelf. 42.7. Aug. 4to.<sup>70</sup> Only a few years later, Finnur Jónsson published Rímnasafn, in which he expanded the edition with variant readings from Copenhagen, Den Arnamagnæanske Samling, Acc. 22. Thus Andrews' analysis, regardless of how thorough and convincing, was already outdated at the time of its publication. Andrews mentions the new edition in one of the footnotes, where he makes a brief observation regarding Acc. 22, but his whole study relies on Fernir fornislenskir rímnaflokkar and Acc. 22 had not yet been systematically studied.<sup>71</sup> The editor of Griplur, Finnur Jónsson, sparsely commented on the discrepancies between the saga and the rímur in the commentary accompanying his edition, which led him to the conclusion that the saga is based on 71. Andrews, ‘Studies in the Fornaldarsögur Norðrlanda’, 540. Andrews' article was published with the date April 1911, while Finnur's new edition of Griplur was published in fascicles in 1909 and 1910. It is highly possible that these two scholars were in some contact, as Andrews is known to have visited Copenhagen, probably during his time as a PhD student in Kiel (see his biography, archived on 20/06/2023 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20230620171230/http://bhort.bh.cornell.edu/andrews.htm>), and Finnur might have informed Andrews about the acquisition of Acc. 22 in 1902 and his updated edition, but it seems doubtful that Andrews has studied its readings as systematically as he studied readings of the remaining manuscripts. The footnote seems like an attempt to ‘cover his back’ as he probably already realised that his study had become outdated the very moment it was published. If Andrews had analysed the readings and structure of Acc. 22 in an equally detailed way as he had studied other manuscripts, we would expect Acc. 22 and its obvious transpositions of stanzas to appear in his table with the overview of the transpositions Andrews, 535.

the rímur.<sup>72</sup> Björn K. Pórólfsdóttir agreed with Andrews and Finnur Jónsson concluding that 17HsG is derived from rímur. He furthermore suggested that the text is closely related to the rímur preserved in AM 146 a 8vo.<sup>73</sup>

Conversely, the idea of the rímur and the saga being independent of each other, as suggested by Kölbing, was revived by Hooper. He believed that the seventeenth-century saga is based on the lost saga, with certain interpolations from the rímur.<sup>74</sup> Hooper presented his stemma of the relationships between, among others, the rímur and the saga, but did not devote much attention to the relationships between various texts of the saga, accepting Andrews' conclusion on the matter.<sup>75</sup>

Hooper's conclusion regarding the saga-rímur relationship relies greatly on the note which follows 17HsG in A601, A587, A193, and (in an abridged form) in T1768. As it is discussed in greater detail in the following chapter (Section 2.4), the note mentions an illegible exemplar, but this is not strong enough evidence to support Hooper's conclusion. At the same time, Hooper probably saw as one of his strong arguments for the independence of the saga and the rímur the absence of one of Blindur's dreams from Gripplur. This had already been observed by Finnur Jónsson..<sup>76</sup> This dream can, however, be seen as a misunderstanding in the saga, which originates in stanza VI:31 of the rímur. This would then provide further evidence for the opposite argument than the one Hooper was making.

Some time after Hooper's article appeared, Brown rejected his conclusion and successfully demonstrated, by emphasizing numerous alterations and reminiscences of poetic form underlying the saga, that the saga is based on the rímur. She concluded:

A close comparison of the texts of S [saga] and R [rímur] suggests very strongly that S is a paraphrase of R. The writer has sometimes abbreviated his text severely and at other times borrowed whole verses, altering only the position or tense of words to disguise the verse-form.<sup>77</sup>

Chapter 2

Oldest manuscripts of 17HsG

The manuscripts discussed in this chapter, as listed in relative chronological order in Table 2.1, constitute the oldest part of the tradition of 17HsG, as they were all written in the second half of the seventeenth century. The discussion of these manuscripts is separated from the younger part of the tradition (Chapter 3) not only due to the chronology but also because these are the manuscripts upon which previous scholars based their arguments regarding the saga's transmission (Section 1.3).<sup>1</sup> Ultimately, due to the high level of variation within the tradition, only the readings from these manuscripts are included in the variant apparatus of the edition of 17HsG accompanying the present study. This chapter describes the oldest manuscripts of 17HsG, assesses the relationships between the texts they preserve, and discusses the manuscript contexts in which the saga appears.

As presented in Table 2.1, all the oldest texts of the saga were written mainly by three scribes. Therefore, they are grouped and discussed separately in the following subsections. Section 2.1 discusses the two manuscripts in the hand of Jón Eggertsson, a poet and manuscript collector who is considered to have been responsible for converting rimur into prose (A601 and P67). Section 2.2 discusses the manuscripts mainly in the hand of Ásgeir Jónsson

AM 601 b 4to (A601)

AM 601 b 4to (A601), held in Stofnun Árna Magnússonar í íslenskum fræðum, is a paper manuscript in quarto. It is broadly dated by Kálund to the seventeenth century.<sup>5</sup> The manuscript consists of 10 leaves of watermarked paper gathered in two quires (I<sup>4</sup>–II<sup>4+2</sup>). The structure of quire II is as follows: (5+8, 6+7, 9, 10).<sup>6</sup>

The material analysis of the manuscript suggests that it is made of recycled paper. The paper probably originates from some book of records or accounts, as the sheets have the written area marked for folio format. Additionally, there are traces of older foliation oriented for folio format in the corners of some leaves; for example, ff 6+7 have the number 176 and ff 5+8 have the number 177.

A601 preserves only two rímur-based sagas, 17HsG (ff 1r–6r) and Bragða-Ölvis saga (ff 6v–10v). Both texts are accompanied by Árni Magnússon's notes that specify that these texts are based on the rímur. For both sagas, A601 has been suggested as the best-text manuscript.<sup>7</sup> The text of 17HsG in A601 is followed by a note that discusses the hypothetical exemplar, see further discussion in Section 2.4.

The manuscript is written in one hand throughout, and the hand can be identified as that of Jón Eggertsson (ca. 1643–1689), whom we have already encountered in the previous chapter. There we have learned that Jón Eggertsson, in the years 1682–1683, was collecting manuscripts in Iceland for the Swedish Antikviteten.

6. The fifth and sixth leaves of this quire (ff 9 and 10 of the manuscript) were never one conjoint leaf, as f. 9 has no watermark, while f. 10 has a partial watermark. These two leaves are currently attached with a piece of Japanese paper to the first leaf of the gathering (f. 5). Previously, they were glued together. It is possible that the manuscript originally consisted of three binions, and the third quire consisted of 9+*12, 10+*11. I would like to thank Natasha Fazlic and Mustafa Kamal from Den Arnamagnæanske Håndskriftsamling in Copenhagen for their help in determining the quire structure of this manuscript when it was on loan in Copenhagen in 2018.

skollegium. He also copied a remarkable number of manuscripts while he was in prison in Copenhagen in the years 1684–1687.<sup>8</sup> Based on his lifespan, the date of writing of A601 could be narrowed down to ca. 1660–89. However, when we take into account the chronology of his scholarly enterprise, especially the fact that he first obtained a manuscript of Griplur during his visit to Iceland (*JE 27 4to, discussed in Section 1.2), it is safe to assume that Jón wrote the manuscript at some point between 1683 and 1687, when the copy of 17HsG in P67 was made.

There is a number of marginal notes accompanying the text of 17HsG, some of which are approximately from the time of writing of the manuscript, and appear to be written in the same hand and with the same ink as the main text.<sup>9</sup> Others most likely post-date the writing of the main text but appear still to be in the main scribe's hand. There are also scholarly marginalia, some of them from Árni Magnússon's time and in his own hand, while others appear to be younger. The list of marginal notes includes the content-related marginalia and corrections in the main scribe's hand:

- ‘Olafr kongr | illegible | j danmerkr | yelldi’ (f. 1r) (Figure 2.1);
- ‘helgi | frækni’ ((f. 1v), which refers to the underlined text introducing Helgi, same practice in many of the cases below;
- ‘Þa voru | 2 kongar J | Suyþiod | hietu baþer | Halldinar | NB Cp. 3.’ (f. 1v), which refers to the underlined name of Sweden and the third chapter of the saga, in which kings from Sweden challenge Ólafur to battle;
- ‘máni kall’ (f. 1v);
- ‘valland | Þráinn’ (f. 2r);
- ‘Semingur | kongr J | Suiþiod’ (f. 3r);
- ‘xxiv’ (f. 3r), addition made in the same ink as the main text probably at the time of writing;
- ‘Suerþid | Mistillteirn’ (f. 3r);

9. The conclusion regarding the ink used in the margins is based on multi spectral analysis, see Kapitan and Stegmann, ‘Writing, Correcting and Annotating AM 601 b 4to: Material and Multispectral Analysis’.

- ‘sinz | rijkis’ (f. 3r), a correction made probably at the time of writing, substituting the deleted ‘danmerkr’;
- ‘kongz sistr | dagni, | suanlhuyt’ (f. 3r);
- ‘helgi broder | hraungvitz’ (f. 3v);
- ‘vatniþ | væner | var fro[ziit] | oc lá yz | yfer’ (f. 3v);
- ‘kara | frilla | helga’ (f. 4r);
- ‘kara do’ (f. 4r);
- ‘Hromundr | Rifia | saman | kvid sinn’ (f. 4v);
- ‘hromundur | misti Sverþ | sitt ofan | um ys’ (f. 4v);
- ‘Hagall kall’ (f. 4v);
- ‘J Geddo | maga | fanst | Mistillteirn’ (f. 5r);
- ‘Blindr | er hiet | Bauvys | leytar Hromundar’ (f. 5r);
- ‘Blind | dreymdi’ (f. 5r);
- ‘og alla kongs | mem’ (f. 5v), an addition made at the time of writing;

the origin and content-oriented marginalia in Árni’s hand:

- ‘ur Rímunum’ (f. 1r);
- ‘i danmörk’ (f. 1r);
- ‘mendacium est þetta er teked ur Rimunum’ (f. 6r);

other marginalia, related to the cataloguing of the manuscript:

- ‘No_601.’ (f. 1r), most likely by Jón Ólafsson;
- ‘601b’ (f. 1r), most likely by Jón Ólafsson;
- foliation in red ink, most likely by Kålund.

The majority of the marginal notes in Jón Eggertsson’s hand are navigational aids, which make it easier to find passages of interest.<sup>10</sup> They give us insight into Jón Eggertsson’s reception of this story, as to which episodes he found interesting or important enough, so that he wanted to be able to easily find them in the text. The marginal notes by Árni Magnússon focus on the origin of the story. The note on f. 6r, ‘mendacium est. þetta er teked ur Rimunum’ (it is a lie this is taken from the rímur), refers to the information provided by the postscript of the saga, which is discussed in Section 2.4 (Figure 2.2). This marginal note together with the note on the first leaf, ‘ur Rímunum’ (from the rímur), suggest that

10. By navigational aids, I mean notes that facilitate the navigation of the text and location of relevant passages; these are also referred to as finding aids, for example in Clemens and Graham, Introduction to Manuscript Studies, 43–45.

Árni knew, or was convinced, that the text in A601 is a reworking of the rímur.

It is unknown when exactly A601 joined the collection of Árni Magnússon, but it was already there at the time when Jón Ólafsson prepared his catalogue of the Arnamagnæan Collection. The catalogue is preserved in AM 456 fol. and AM 477 fol., and according to its record, A601 was part of manuscript number 601 in quarto (to which I refer as *AM 601 4to).<sup>11</sup> According to the catalogue, this manuscript contained 'Efne (edur innehalld) ur nockrum Rimum' (AM 456 fol., f. 24r), including the summary of the following: Ásmundar rímur og Tryggva,<sup>12</sup> Ormars rímur Framarssonar, Gríms rímur og Hjálmars, Úlfhams rímur, Sigurðar rímur Fornasonar (today in AM 601 a 4to), Hrómundar rímur Greipssonar and Bragða-Ölvís rímur (together in A601), Póris háleggs rímur (AM 601 c 4to), Skjaldar þátturnar Danakonungs (AM 601 d 4to). Considering the heterogeneous nature of the individual parts, it is clear that *AM 601 4to was a composite manuscript. Given the chronology of some of its parts, it is probably safe to assume that *AM 601 4to was a result of Árni's enterprise to aggregate texts dealing with the contents of various sets of rímur.

11. As previously mentioned, my naming practice of former codices is inspired by that introduced by Beeke Stegmann in her 'Árni Magnússon's Rearrangement of Paper Manuscripts'; I add the asterisk in front of the siglum to make disambiguation easier.

12. This part is today either lost or a part of another manuscript, perhaps AM 576 b 4to, but this requires further investigation.

From Árni Magnússon's correspondence, we know that he was interested in receiving prose summaries of the contents of rímur. Prose summaries were probably easier to use in his examination of intertextual relationships between various Old Norse-Icelandic stories than works written in the poetic form of rímur.<sup>13</sup> It is unknown when the individual parts got separated, or in fact, whether the individual parts registered as *AM 601 4to were ever bound into a single volume. Regardless, A601 remained in Copenhagen until 1975, when it was transferred to Iceland.

Papp. Fol. nr 67 (P67)

Papp. Fol. nr 67 (P67), held in Kungliga biblioteket in Stockholm, is a paper manuscript in folio format, which consists of iii+178+iv leaves of watermarked paper.<sup>14</sup> P67 is dated to the second half of the seventeenth century, but the date 1687 is attested twice on f. 2r.<sup>15</sup> It appears first on the right margin, written probably in the main scribe's hand 'Skrifábor eptir | miög gamlri | Membrana | Kiöbenhafn | Anno 1687' (Written after a very old parchment manuscript, Copenhagen 1687). It appears again on top of the same page in a marginal note regarding the acquisition of the manuscript: 'ankommit från Copenhagen 5 Octob:l Anno 1687 | 45 Drk' (arrived from Copenhagen on 5 October 1687. 45 riksdaler).

P67 preserves twenty two sagas, short tales, rímur, some riddles, and excerpts. They appear in the following order: Stjörnu-Odda draumur (ff 2r–11r), Bergbúa þáttur (ff 11v–13r), Kumblbúa þáttur (ff 13v–14r:10), Draumur Þorsteins Síðu-Hallssonar (ff 14r:11–14v), Svarfdæla saga (ff 15r–55r), Valla-Ljóts saga (ff 56r–71r), Æfintýri af einn bonda og ein fugla (ff 71v:1–71v:33), Æfintýri af tveimur kaupmönnum (ff 72r:1–73r), Æfintýri af þrjá stall-bræður (ff 73v:1–73v:32), Filipórímur (ff 74r–90v:9), two riddles

14. The quire structure of the manuscript is irregular and could not be examined due to tight binding. It seems like quaternions and ternions dominate. I would like to thank Patrik Granholm and Christina Svensson from Kungliga biblioteket for their help with the physical examination of this manuscript.

15. Gödel, Katalog öfver Kongl. bibliotekets fornisländska och fornorska hand-skrifter, 196–199.

(ff 90v:10–90v:22), excerpts from the Edda (ff 91r:1–91r:8), verses from Grettis saga (ff 91r:9–91r:27), verses from Gunnlaugs saga ormstungu (ff 91v:1–91v:26), Gríms rímur og Hjálmars (ff 92v–101v), 17HsG (ff 102v–116v), Bragða-Ölvis saga (ff 117v–128v), Hákonar þáttur Hárekssonar (ff 129v–144v), Þorsteins þáttur Austfirðings (ff 148v–151v), Þorsteins saga hvíta (ff 152v–167v), Albanus saga Vígvaldssonar (ff 168r–179v).

The leaves at the beginning of the codex, ff 1–91, are written on both sides, but in the later part, ff 92–179, the texts are written mainly on the verso side, leaving the rectos blank. The blank side was probably intended for a Swedish or Latin translation of the text which was never supplied.<sup>16</sup> There are other known manuscripts which preserve multilingual texts of the sagas, and this seems to be typical of antiquarian manuscripts from the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries. For example, Papp. fol. nr 73, dated to 1738, preserves Gríms saga loðinkinna, Ketils saga hængs, and Örvar-Odds saga, with the Old Norse-Icelandic text on the verso side and a Swedish translation on the recto side; Papp. fol. nr 90, dated to 1683–1720, preserves Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar written in two columns, Old Norse-Icelandic on the left-hand column and Swedish on the right-hand column; similarly Papp. fol. nr 88, dated to 1683–1691, preserves Göngu-Hrólfs saga written in two columns with Old Norse and Swedish side by side.

On f. 1r of P67, there is a table of contents which starts with the words: ‘Registur Jfer Pat Sem ä Hier medfilgiand . 28 Ørkum Finst Skrifadt’ (Register over this, which can be found written on the following 28 sheets), followed by a list of the first five sagas included in the extant manuscript. In the right margin, there is the note ‘skrifad Epter miög gamli Membrana’ (written after a very old parchment manuscript), emphasising that the volume contains ancient texts. The items listed in the table of contents and the introductory note mentioning 28 sheets of paper suggest that the codex originally contained, or was supposed to contain, only 56 leaves in folio format, so 28 sheets of paper, preserving these five Íslendingasögur and Íslendingaþættir, but the final product that reached Stockholm in 1687 was extended by additional texts. The table of contents on

f. 1r continues and lists the remaining texts in the volume, but this part of the table of contents is written in a different script type and perhaps also in a different hand.

P67 is written in one main hand, which can be identified as that of Jón Egertsson, thanks to the slip of paper with a note in Johan Hadorph's hand identifying Jón as the scribe.<sup>17</sup> The analysis of the corpus copied by Jón conducted by Jucknies also confirm this attribution. Jucknies observed that P67 is a copy of A601 and that it clearly had to be intended for a Swedish audience. The script type is much clearer than in A601, the abbreviations are expanded and the language is slightly adjusted, making P67 easier to read for non-Icelanders.<sup>18</sup>

The text of 17HsG is accompanied by marginalia in Guðmundur Ólafsson's (1652–95) hand, who might also be responsible for underlining person and place names in the text. The marginalia are listed below:

- ‘Ölafur köngur | i GardaRike, | son Gnodar- | Äsmundar,’ (f. 102v);
- ‘NB. | Hrökur hinn | svarte: Gunnlód döttler hans. | Hrómundur | Gripsson | og brædur hans voru hennar synir’ (f. 102v);
- ‘Hrómundur Gripsson helge hin frækne | landvarnar madur | i Svíþiod.’ (f. 104v);
- ‘Präinn | köngur i | Vallande’ (f. 106v);
- ‘Semingur | köngur i Svíjþiöd’ (f. 108r);
- ‘halldingar, edur | Haddingar | tveir köngar | i Svíjþiöd: | og Helge hinn | frækne, Bröder | Hraungvidz.’ (f. 109v);
- ‘Kära | Galldrakolna’ (f. 110v);
- ‘Hagall | kall. ’ (f. 112v).

Additionally, the text is followed by a short note, which specifies that Hrómundur is mentioned in chapter 2 of Flóamanna saga. These annotations give us insight into Guðmundur Ólafsson's reception of the saga at the time when he was working for the Swedish Antikvitetskollegium. He was clearly interested in the Swedish aspects of the story, as well as in names of various kings mentioned in the saga. Interestingly, he does not annotate Ólafur's sisters' names, as Jón Eggertsson does in A601, but he does so with the name of Kára, whom he describes as 'Galldrakona' (the sorceress). Clearly, Kára, as Helgi's mistress, is more relevant for the Swedish audience because Helgi is presented as a landvarnarmaður (defender of the land) in Sweden.

Regarding the provenance of P67, as previously mentioned, the manuscript arrived in Stockholm in 1687, shortly after the texts preserved in it were copied. It is still in Stockholm, where the manuscript can be found today.

2.2 Ásgeir Jónsson's group

AM 587 b 4to (A587)

AM 587 b 4to (A587), held in the Stofnun Árna Magnússonar í íslenskum fræðum in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in quarto, which consists of 11 leaves gathered in two quires (I<sup>4</sup>, II<sup>8</sup> wants 8).<sup>19</sup> The first quire is made of watermarked paper, while the second quire is made of thicker paper without any watermarks. Kálund dated the manuscript to ca. 1700.<sup>20</sup> According to Már Jónsson, however, the manuscript was written in the years 1686–1688,<sup>21</sup> or ca. 1688.<sup>22</sup>) The manuscript preserves only one text, 17HsG, written on ff 1–11.

A587 is written in two hands, and the hand shift overlaps with the quire boundary. The first four leaves are written by Ásgeir Jónsson (ca. 1657–1707),<sup>23</sup> while the remaining leaves are written by Eyjólfur Björnsson (1666–1746), a priest and scribe known mainly for his work for Árni Magnússon.<sup>24</sup> The text of 17HsG itself is, 19. The structure of quire II is as follows: 5, 6+11, 7+10, 8+9. It is most likely that it used to be a regular quaternion, so the first leaf of the gathering (f. 5) was conjoint with *f. 12.

20. Kálund, Katalog over den Arnamagnæanske Håndskriftsamling, I:748–749.

however, continuous and is written in one script type, i.e. chancery. It is worth noting that in the part written by Ásgeir, the dominating shapes of the letters ‘s’ and ‘b’ – which are believed to have a clear chronological development in Ásgeir Jónsson’s hand – are the ‘s’ type 70 and ‘b’ type 35. These are contemporary with the letter forms in, for example, AM 38 fol., dated to before 1698.<sup>25</sup>

Már Jónsson suggests that the manuscript was written during the time when both Ásgeir Jónsson and Eyjólfur Björnsson were in Copenhagen, so between 1687 and 1688.<sup>26</sup> The hand shift in the middle of a text could equally well suggest a simultaneous collaboration between the two scribes, or a chronological development of the manuscript. It is easy to imagine a scenario in which Ásgeir Jónsson started copying the text of 17HsG, but then left it unfinished when he left for Norway in 1688, and Eyjólfur Björnsson completed the transcription at a later point.

Considering the history of this manuscript, however, the simultaneous collaboration seems to be a more likely scenario. A587 joined the collection of Árni Magnússon in 1720, together with other manuscripts Árni acquired from the widow of Torfæus. At that time, it was part of Torfæus’ manuscript number XIII in 4to (henceforth *TT XIII 4to).<sup>27</sup> There are traces of older pagination, from 253 on f. 1r to 274 on f. 11v, which probably reflect the position of 17HsG in Torfæus’ manuscript. *TT XIII 4to contained multiple texts written by both, Ásgeir Jónsson and Eyjólfur Björnsson. Among these texts was, for example, Stjörnu-Odda draumur, today preserved in AM 555 i 4to.<sup>28</sup> In the case of AM 555 i 4to, the first ten leaves of the manuscript are in Eyjólfur’s hand and the remaining six are in Ásgeir’s hand, the opposite situation to that observed in A587. While research into former codices owned by Torfæus is still ongoing, as part of my current research project, it seems quite likely that Ásgeir and Eyjólfur collaborated simultaneously on the production of *TT XIII 4to.<sup>29</sup>

As research by Beeke Stegmann demonstrated, *TT XIII 4to was rearranged by Árni and eventually various parts of the manuscript either were made into separate manuscripts (i.e., today's AM 483 4to, AM 554 f 4to, AM 555 i 4to, A587, and AM 359 a 4to), became parts of other manuscripts (today's AM 1008 4to), or are lost. At the time when Jón Ólafsson prepared his catalogue, preserved in AM 456 fol. and AM 477 fol., A587 was part of manuscript number 587 in quarto (*AM 587 4to), which contained fornaldarsögur and þættir: two copies of Hróa þáttur heimska, 17HsG, Göngu-Hrólfs saga, Sörla saga sterka, Áns saga bogsveigis and two copies of Sörla þáttur. 17HsG was the only part of *AM 587 4to that originated from *TT XIII 4to.<sup>30</sup>

It is worth mentioning here that A587 contains a marginal note in Torfæus's hand on f. 5v which reads: 'Svanhuita Daglny Systur Olafs | Konga, Saga aff | Gaungu-Hrolfi | seiga bædi Olaff | kong er þær born | hans enn ecke Gnol0ar] asmundar' (Svanhvít, Dagný sisters of King Ólafur. According to the saga of Göngu-Hrólfs, Ólafur and his sisters are his children, not Gnoðar-Ásmundur's.) This comment deals with the royal genealogies of Scandinavia, revealing Torfæus' interest in the contents of the story. As discussed in Section 1.2, we know that Torfæus had been interested in the story about Hrómundur at least since 1684 when he wrote a letter to Torfi Jónsson in which he asked for some information about various sagas, including the story about Hrómundur. Here, Torfæus observes that the account of Göngu-Hrólfs saga regarding Ólafur's and his sisters' father is different from the account in 17HsG. In Göngu-Hrólfs saga, it is Hrólfs, while in 17HsG it is Gnoðar-Ásmundur. The text of the saga is followed by a note that discusses the hypothetical exemplar, which is discussed further in Section 2.4.

29. My current project, 'Virtual Library of Torfæus: Manuscripts of Old Norse texts owned by the royal historiographer Thormodus Torfæus', examines the dispersed manuscripts previously owned by Torfæus. The project is funded by the Carlsberg Foundation (grant number CF20-0225) and hosted at the University of Oxford.

30. Stegmann, 'Árni Magnússon's Rearrangement of Paper Manuscripts', 83–90, 312.

Finally, it has to be mentioned that this manuscript, written in Copenhagen at the end of the seventeenth century, after a short period in Norway, eventually returned to Copenhagen. It was housed at the Arnamagnæan Collection until its transfer to Iceland in 1982.

Thott 1768 4to (T1768)

Thott 1768 4to (T1768), held in Det Kongelige Bibliotek in Copenhagen, is a paper manuscript in quarto, consisting of ii+294+ii leaves gathered in thirty-eight irregular quires (mostly quaternions and ternions) made of watermarked paper. The quire structure is I<sup>6</sup>, II<sup>10</sup>, III<sup>12</sup>, IV<sup>8</sup>–V<sup>8</sup>, VI<sup>6</sup>, VII<sup>8</sup>–XVII<sup>8</sup>, XVIII<sup>6</sup>–XX<sup>6</sup>, XXI<sup>8</sup>, XXII<sup>6</sup>–XXIII<sup>6</sup>, XXIV<sup>8</sup>–XXVI<sup>8</sup>, XXVII<sup>10</sup>, XXVIII<sup>8</sup>–XXIX<sup>8</sup>, XXX<sup>6</sup>–XXXI<sup>6</sup>, XXXII<sup>8</sup>–XXXIII<sup>8</sup>, XXXIV<sup>6</sup>, XXXV<sup>8</sup>–XXXVII<sup>8</sup>, XXXVIII<sup>10</sup>. Kålund dated the manuscript to the end of the seventeenth century, but there have been multiple attempts to date various parts of this manuscript more precisely.<sup>31</sup> No study of the complete manuscript, however, yet exists.

T1768 contains fifty en sagas, mainly Íslendingasögur and Íslendingabættir, but also fornaldarsögur, one riddarasaga, and some short tales. The texts appear in this order: Frá Fornjóti og hans ættmönnum (ff 1r–4r), table of contents (ff 4v–5r),<sup>32</sup> Hálfss saga og Hálfrekka (ff 7r–16v), Porðar saga hreðu (ff 17r–49v),<sup>33</sup> Svarfdæla saga (ff 51r–94v),<sup>34</sup> Flóamanna saga (ff 99r–129v),<sup>35</sup> Hreiðars þáttr heimska (ff 131r–139v), Sneglu-Halla þáttur (ff 140r–149r),<sup>36</sup> Brandkrossa þáttur (ff 151r–156v), Droplaugarsona saga (ff 157r–177v), Fóstbraeðra saga (ff 178r–232v), Völsa þáttur (ff 233r–238r),<sup>37</sup>

The main bulk of the manuscript was written by Ásgeir Jónsson, but it appears clear that various parts of the manuscript were written at different times, as three different script types were used.<sup>39</sup> Only one text in T1768, Flóamanna saga, is dated, thanks to the colophon which states that the saga was finished on 2 June 1687 in Copenhagen. Based on the overlaps between text and quire boundaries, we can distinguish twelve production units, and 17HsG establishes one of them. The text is written on a single quire (XXXV) in Kurrent script, which according to Verri was Ásgeir's 'original' or 'default' script.<sup>40</sup> The text of 17HsG is followed by a note that discusses the hypothetical exemplar, further discussed in Section 2.4.

Elsewhere in the manuscript, there are additions in the hand of Jón Ólafsson Grunnvíkingur (1705–79), who examined this manuscript around 1754, as the note on f. 5r indicates.<sup>41</sup> The additions include two tables of contents on ff 4v–5r, which make a very interesting example of saga classification and reflect Jón's reception of these sagas. If we take the table of contents at face value, we can conclude that Jón saw some of the stories included in this volume as historical sources, but others as fiction. On f. 4v there is an incomplete list of sagas included in the volume,<sup>42</sup> which starts with the header 'Personæ videntur forté exstisset' (Persons who seem perhaps to have existed), where the sagas are grouped by geographical area, first Norway, then Sweden, followed by Denmark, and finally Iceland. Icelandic sagas are divided into three subcategories: the northern group, the eastern group, and the southern group. 17HsG appears under the heading of Swedish sagas and is the only representative of this group. On f. 5r there is another table of contents, in which all the sagas are listed in the order in which they appear in T1768. In that list, 17HsG is accompanied by two comments: ‘Sveco-Russ’ and ‘vera forté aliquatenus’. 17HsG is classified as a saga dealing with Swedish and Russian contents which is ‘to some extent probably true’. The comment ‘vera forté aliquatenus’, which was used to describe 17HsG, lies somewhere in the middle of Jón’s spectrum of historicity, which spans from ‘pudendum figm ntum’ (shameful ficti n) on one side of the spectrum, used for Völsa þáttur, and ‘vera’ on the other side, used for Fóstbraðra saga.<sup>43</sup>

The ownership history of T1768 is uncertain, and it remains unclear when and how exactly it found its way into Otto Thott’s (1703–1785) collection. According to Loth, this transfer likely occurred between 1754 and 1785.<sup>44</sup> Loth suggested that the manuscript had to be in Iceland for some time, as fragments of Icelandic letters were used as paste-downs. She further proposed that the manuscript returned to Copenhagen around 1784/5. Although this remains speculative and warrants further research, it is certain that the manuscript became part of Det Kongelige Bibliotek’s collections in 1786, alongside over 4000 other bequeathed manuscripts..<sup>45</sup>

AM 193 e fol. (A193), held in the Stofnun Árna Magnússonar í íslenskum fræðum in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in folio which consists of i+8+i leaves of watermarked paper gathered in one quire of four conjoint leaves (I<sup>8</sup>). The leaves are paginated 1–16 in similar ink to the main text, probably by the main scribe, and foliated 1–8 in red ink most likely by Kálund. In his catalogue, Kálund dated the manuscript to ca. 1700, but according to Már Jónsson the dating can be narrowed down to the years 1690–1697.<sup>46</sup>

A193 today preserves only one text, 17HsG (ff 1r–8v). The text is written in one hand throughout. The hand can be identified as that of Ásgeir Jónsson. The script type used in A193 is chancery, which is one of the script types frequently used by Ásgeir.<sup>47</sup> The dominating shapes of the letters ‘s’ and ‘b’, which allow us to establish relative chronology in Ásgeir’s manuscripts, are *b*35 and *s*70, similar to those found in A587.<sup>48</sup>

There is a marginal note on f. 1r of A193 in Torfæus’s hand which reads: ‘confers Saga af alfi og alfsreckum | hrokr var ein af koppum alfs er | atte brynhilde haka | kongs dottur’ (compare Hálfs saga ok Hálfsrekka, Hrókur was one of the champions of Hálfur that had as a wife Brynhild daughter of King Haki). This again, just as in A587, reflects Torfæus’s interests in historiography and royal genealogies. Torfæus noted here that the account of 17HsG should be compared with the account of Hálfs saga og Hálfsrekka, in which the relation between Hrómundur and Hrókur is made explicit in chapter 16.<sup>49</sup> Furthermore, the text of the saga is followed by a note that discusses the hypothetical exemplar, discussed further in Section 2.4.

A193 joined the collection of Árni Magnússon in 1720 together with other manuscripts Árni acquired from the widow of Torfæus. At that time, it was a part of Torfæus’ manuscript number XIII in folio (*TT XIII fol.).<sup>50</sup> The entry in Árni’s catalogue for this part of the manuscript reads: ‘Hromundar Saga Greips sonar (eptir exemplare med hendi Eyolfs Biorns sonar komnu fra mier)’.<sup>51</sup> This comment indicates that A193 is a copy of a manuscript in Eyjólfur Björnsson’s hand which was perhaps in Árni's possession, most likely A587 (see textual evidence in Section 2.4).

*TT XIII fol. contained various texts, mainly fornaldarsögur and konungasögur, but, as Stegmann demonstrated, it was rearranged by Árni. Ultimately, various parts of the manuscript either became separate single-text codices, i.e. today's AM 67 a fol., AM 202 c fol., AM 193 a fol., AM 193 b fol., AM 193 c fol., A193, AM 7 fol., AM 17 fol., or parts of other composite manuscripts, i.e. today's AM 34 fol., AM 173 fol., or are lost.<sup>52</sup> At the time when Jón Ólafsson prepared his catalogue, A193 was a part of a manuscript number 193 in folio (*AM 193 fol.), which contained fi e fornaldarsögur: Hervarar saga og Heiðreks (AM 193 a fol.), Eiríks saga víðförla (AM 193 b fol.), Yngvars saga víðförla (AM 193 c fol.), 17HsG, and Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra (AM 193 d fol.) (A477, f. 9v). Four of these items were previously parts of *TT XIII fol., but Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra was added from another Torfæan manuscript, *TT XVI fol.<sup>53</sup>

Just like A587, A193 was held in Copenhagen until it was transferred to Iceland in 1976.

AM 345 4to (A345)

AM 345 4to (A345), held in the Stofnun Árna Magnússonar í íslenskum fræðum in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in quarto, which consists of i+78+i leaves made of watermarked paper gathered in eleven quires. The quire structure is: I<sup>6</sup>, II<sup>2</sup>, III<sup>8</sup>–VI<sub>8</sub>, VII<sup>10</sup>, VIII<sup>8</sup>–X<sup>8</sup>, XI<sup>4</sup>.<sup>54</sup> The manuscript is dated by Kålund to the end of the 54. The structure of quire V is uncertain; it seems to be 25, 26, 27, 28+29, 30, 31, 32, so the outer leaves used to be conjoint, but today are singletons and only the innermost bifolium remained intact. Cf. Stegmann's catalogue on <http://chopandchange.nfi.ku.dk> (last accessed 28/08/2018, but currently unavailable as of 7/01/2024).

seventeenth century, but internal evidence allows us to date it more precisely to around 1694–1695.<sup>55</sup> 17HsG is followed by a colophon that reads ‘Anno 1695’ (f. 78v). Elsewhere in the manuscript, two other dated colophons can be found, on f. 50v with the date 1694 and on f. 74r with 1695.

A345 is a composite manuscript, containing fi e fornaldarsögur: Áns saga bogsveigis (ff 1r–8v), Porsteins saga Vikingssonar (ff 9r–29v), a supplied table of contents (f. 29v),<sup>56</sup> Hervarar saga og Heiðreks (ff 30r–50r), Bósa saga og Herrauðs (ff 50v–74r) 17HsG (ff 74v–78v).

The manuscript is written in three hands, but by a single scribe using three different script types: chancery, Kurrent and a hybrid of the two.<sup>57</sup> On f. 29v there is a table of contents which lists the sagas included in the book and a note written by Jón Jónsson in which he specifies that in 1703 he owned this codex and that the table of contents was added by his deceased father Jón Þórðarson in 1700 or 1702.<sup>58</sup> The scribe can be identified as Jón Þórðarson, a son of Þórður Jónsson. Both father and son worked as scribes for, among others, Magnús Jónsson í Vigur.<sup>59</sup> This does not mean, however, that the manuscript was written for Magnús Jónsson. As Jón Helgason observed, not all manuscripts in Þórður’s and Jón’s hands can be associated with Magnús. At least Þórður is known to have provided services for other people, for example, Magnús Magnússon (1630–1704), a sýslumaður from Eyri in Ísafjarðarsýla, for whom he wrote Lbs 236 fol.<sup>60</sup>

The most recent study of this manuscript and its history was presented by Stegmann, who observed that A345 consists of three codicological units, and 17HsG, together with Hervarar saga og Heiðreks and Bósa saga og Herrauðs, belongs to the third codicological unit.<sup>61</sup> All of these texts used to belong to one codex, called in Árni's catalogue 'bok Markusar Bergslsonar i 4to' (AM 435 a 4to, f. 80r). As Árni's note indicates (AM 435 a 4to, f. 82r), he received this manuscript in 1710 from Markús Bergsson (1688–1741), a sýslumaður of Ísafjarðarsý la and rearranged its contents.<sup>62</sup>

At the time when Jón Ólafsson was composing his catalogue, 17HsG was a part of a manuscript number 345 in 4to (*AM 345 4to), which contained eight sagas, the fi e already mentioned, which are preserved in A345, and additionally three other fornaldarsögur which are now lost: Hálfdanar saga Brönumfóstra, Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar, and Haralds saga Hringsbana (AM 456 fol. f. 18r and AM 477 fol., f. 29r).<sup>63</sup>

A345 was held in Copenhagen until it was transferred to Iceland in 1982.

BL Add. 4859 (B4859)

BL Add. 4859 (B4859), held in the British Library in London, is a paper manuscript in folio, which consists of iii+370+iii leaves made of watermarked paper. The quire structure is difficult to determine, as the manuscript was rebound in the 1970s and all its leaves are set on paper guards.<sup>64</sup> Jón Helgason in his 'Catalogue of the Icelandic Manuscripts in the British Library' dated B4859 to the years 1693–1696, following the dates attested in the colophons and on the title page (f. 1r). As McDonald Werronen observed, some

B4859 preserves twenty-four sagas including fornaldarsögur, riddarasögur, Íslendingasögur and one konungasaga. The volume opens with a title page (f. 1r) followed by a table of contents on the verso side of the same leaf and the sagas in the following order: 17HsG (ff 2r–6r), Bragða-Ölvis saga (ff 6v–9v), Valdimars saga (ff 10r–14v), Mírmanns saga (ff 15r–31v), Ivens saga (ff 32r–45v), Parcevals saga (ff 46r–60v), Valvers þáttur (ff 61r–65v), Erex saga (ff 66r–74v), Möttuls saga (ff 75r–81r), Virgilius saga (ff 81v–91r), Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra (ff 91v–94r), Hálfdanar þáttur svarta (ff 94v–96r), Göngu-Hrólf's saga (ff 96v–118v), Ármanns saga og Þorsteins gála (ff 119r–128v), Böðvars þáttur bjarka (ff 129r–142r), Söguþáttur af Kallímus (ff 142v–145v), Hervarar saga og Heiðreks (ff 146r–162v), Hákonar saga Hákonarsonar (ff 163r–237v), Lykla-Péturs saga og Magelónu fögru (ff 240r–264v), Knýtlinga saga (ff 265r–312v), Ævintýri af Sniðulfi bónda og hans ótrú konu (ff 313r–313v), Rémundar saga keisarasonar (ff 314r–344v), Kirjalaax saga (ff 344v–366r), Sagan af Tító og Gesippo (ff 367r–370v).

The texts are written in two hands, the main one being that of Jón Pórðarson and the minor one being that of Magnús Ketilsson (ca. 1675–1709), who wrote ff 1r–v, 142v–145v, 313r–v, and 367r–370.<sup>66</sup> Unlike A345, B4859 was certainly written for Magnús Jónsson í Vigur as it is made explicit on the title page (f. 1r) that the sagas were collected on behalf of Magnús: ‘Sagna Flolckur Kostgiæfelega Saman Hendtur [...] af Ehrurijkum og ættgøfugum høfdings manne Malgnuse Joonssyne Ad Wigur, þeim til frödleiks og skiemmtunar, er l þess hättar fornar frasaugur heira vilia’<sup>67</sup> (A collection of sagas diligently put together [...] by a honourable and noble aristocrat, Magnús Jónsson from Vigur, for education and entertainment of those who wish to hear this sort of ancient stories).<sup>68</sup>

The ownership history of B4859 is fairly well known because the volume appears in the lists of books in the possession of Magnús's family members.<sup>69</sup> B4859 was owned by Páll Vídalín (1667–1727), the lawyer and acquaintance of Árni Magnússon, and by Bjarni Halldórsson (1703–1773), a sýslumaður of Húnnavatnsþing in Northern Iceland.<sup>70</sup> Already in 1892, Jón Porkelsson<sup>71</sup> identified B4859 as number 8 in Páll's register and number 77 in Bjarni's register and this identification has been maintained in the scholarship since then.<sup>72</sup> The most likely scenario for how the book ended up first in Páll's and then in Bjarni's possession is the inheritance of the book by Magnús's daughter and granddaughter. After Magnús Jónsson's death in 1702, his daughter Porbjörg Magnúsdóttir (1667–1737) most likely inherited the volume. Since she was married to Páll Vídalín, with whom she lived at Víðidalstunga in Vestur-Húnnavatnssýsla, the book was registered as his. Afterwards, their daughter Hólmfríður Pálsdóttir inherited the book and since she was married from 1727 to Bjarni Halldórsson, with whom she lived first at Víðidalstunga and later from 1737 at Pingeyrar in Austur-Húnnavatnssýsla, the book was registered as his.

The manuscript was donated to the British Museum (later British Library) by Joseph Banks (1743–1820), a British explorer, after his travels to Iceland in 1773.<sup>73</sup> His donations took place during the years 1773–1781.<sup>74</sup> According to Halldór Hermannsson, Banks collected some of the manuscripts while in Iceland, but others were sent to him later by Ólafur Stephensen, the governor of Iceland. From the correspondence between Banks and Ólafur Stephensen, it is certain that Ólafur not only collected manuscripts for Banks but also commissioned copies for him. Ólafur, for example, wrote in one of his letters to Banks, ‘Since your departure from the country I have in accordance with the commission you gave me, taken pains to collect, and afterwards to have copied by the best scribes available in this country, antiquities and histories’.<sup>75</sup>

Since B4859 is number 3 in Banks’s collection, we can assume that it was a part of the first donation in 1773, and possibly one of the manuscripts he collected personally during his travels. It cannot be excluded that he obtained the manuscript directly from Bjarni Halldórsson, or from his family, shortly before Bjarni’s death in 1773, but there is no evidence known to me for that. To the contrary, McDonald Werronen in her catalogue, suggested that ‘Banks acquired these manuscripts [among them B4859] from Ólafur Stephensen (1731–1812), who bought them for him shortly after the death of their owner Bjarni Hal[l]dórsson in January 1773’.<sup>76</sup>

Lbs 222 fol. (L222), known as Rauðskinna and held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in folio, consisting of ii + 347 + ii leaves made of watermarked paper and gathered in forty-five quires, mostly quaternions. The quire structure is uncertain, but appears to be: I<sup>8</sup>–IV<sup>8</sup>, V<sup>10</sup> VI<sup>8</sup>–XXI<sup>8</sup>, XXII<sup>6</sup> wants 6, XXIII<sup>8</sup>, XXIV<sup>4</sup>, XXV<sup>6+2</sup> 7 and 8 after 6, XXVI<sup>6</sup>–XXVII<sup>6</sup>, XXVIII<sup>8</sup> wants 1, XXIX<sup>8</sup>–XXXI<sup>8</sup>, XXXII<sup>4</sup>, XXXIII<sup>8</sup>–XLIV<sup>8</sup>, XLV<sup>8+1</sup> 9 after 8.<sup>77</sup> L222 is dated to 1695–1698, 77. The quire structure is uncertain due to extensive repairs. Between f. 1 and f. 175 and then again between f. 243 to the end of the volume, the structure is quite regular, featuring only quaternions (with the exception of quire V, which is a quinion, and XLV, which today consists of 9 leaves, the last one being a singleton). In the middle part of the manuscript, between f. 176 and f. 242, extensive irregularities occur.

L222 contains nineteen items including riddarasögur, fornaldarsögur, chapbooks, one konungasaga, as well as one saga and one short tale of Icelanders. They appear in the following order: Clarus saga (ff 1r–13r), Haralds saga Hringsbana (ff 13v–26r), Sigurðar saga fóts (ff 26v–30v), Sturlaugs saga starfsama (ff 31r–42v), Knýtinga saga (ff 43r–89r), 17HsG (ff 89v–93r), Bragða-Ölvis saga (ff 93v–96r), Griseldis saga (ff 96v–99v), Galmeys saga riddara (ff 100r–175v), Bósa saga og Herrauðs (ff 176r–195v), Stjörnu-Odda draumur (ff 196r–202r), Esópus saga (ff 202v–214v), Brita þáttur (ff 215r–217v), Trönu þáttur (ff 218r–219r), Sigurgarðs saga frækna (ff 219v–233r), Valdimars saga (ff 233v–239v), Bréf af Alexandri Magni (ff 240r–242r), Njáls saga (ff 243r–345r), and some stanzas from Njáls saga (ff 345v–347r).

Bréf af Alexandri Magni<sup>79</sup> and verses from Njáls saga are later additions. At the end of the manuscript there is a table of contents added on the rear flyleaf which lists all nineteen items in this volume, including the additions. The presence of the later additions in L222 is made clear in the table of contents, where by items 17 and 19, we can read that they were ‘skrifaðar af öðrum’ (written by someone else) and ‘seinna bætt’ (later added) to the volume.

The only discrepancy between the table of contents and the order in which texts appear today is the position of Brita þáttur (ff 215r–217v), today the thirteenth item in the codex directly following Esópus saga (ff 202v–214v), but in the table of contents Brita þáttur was the tenth item, following Galmeys saga riddara (ff 100r–175v), suggesting the contents might have been rearranged.<sup>80</sup>

78. Páll Eggert Ólason, Skrá, I:77–78.

79. This text is catalogued simply as sendibréf but it certainly belongs to the Alexandrian tradition as discussed by Skárup, ‘Bréf Alexandri Magni. Den norrøne oversættelse af Epistola Alexandri Magni ad Aristotelem udgivet sammen med forlægget’.

80. This presents a challenge from the perspective of the structure of quire XXIX, which is 215+222, 216+221, 217+220, 218+219. As it stands, currently f. 217 appears conjoint with f. 220, and three different texts appear across these leaves. Brita þáttur ends on f. 217v, and on f. 218r Trönu þáttur begins, which then ends on f. 219r, and on f. 219v Sigurgarðs saga frækna starts. It seems possible that the repairs obscure the original structure of this manuscript.

L222 begins with a title page added on the front flyleaf likely written at the same time as the table of contents. The title page reads: ‘Søgu-bók | af ymsum | Fornkonúngum ok kóppumm | skrifud 1695–98 | af | Jóni Pórðarsyni, | forðum prestur að Söndum í Dýrafirði (A saga-book of various ancient kings and heroes, written 1695–1698 by Jón Pórðarson, formerly pastor at Sandar in Dýrafjörður) Here, we learn that Jón Pórðarson, who was a priest at Sandar in Dýrafjörður was the scribe of this manuscript, working on it in the years 1695–1698. As mentioned before, there are also later additions in diff rent hands, ff 240r–242r, dated to 1731, and ff 345v–347r dated to 1746, but the hands have not yet been identifi d.<sup>81</sup> It is not unlikely that the title page is a copy of an older title page which got damaged and was therefore replaced. The manuscript must have been in poor condition, as the extensive repairs of the support suggest. It is interesting to note that someone supplied the text which went missing due to the repairs, see, for example, the very striking cases on ff 1r–v and 43r–v. It cannot be excluded that it was the same person responsible for the additions and the table of contents.

Landsbókasafn Íslands obtained L222 from the collection of Jón Pétursson (1812–1896), a lawyer and judge,<sup>82</sup> but it is unknown how he came into possession of the manuscript.<sup>83</sup> There are various names written in the manuscript, including ‘Jón Pjetursson’ and ‘Brynjólfur Oddsson’, most likely Brynjoólfur Oddsson (1825–1887), the bookbinder.<sup>84</sup> It would not be surprising if Brynjólfur was one of the previous owners of the manuscript and was also responsible for the repairs.

2.4 Textual Relationships

As discussed in Section 1.3, competing interpretations of the relationships among the oldest manuscripts of 17HsG were proposed in previous scholarship, with the most important contributions by Kölbing and Andrews.<sup>85</sup> Despite some errors in Andrews' lists of variants, there is no evidence pointing towards any other conclusion than that A601 is the codex optimus of this tradition. My own research has led me to the same conclusion and I believe that A601 is not only the codex optimus but also the archetype of the entire tradition of 17HsG, as Figure 2.3 illustrates. There is no significant variant in A601 that would justify an additional common exemplar for this tradition.

Since the objective of this study is to investigate the entire transmission history of HsG, it was necessary to revise the simplified stemmas by Kölbing and Andrews and present a more nuanced view of the relationships between all the individual texts. This approach enabled me to identify major (or substantial) variants, which, in turn, allowed me to later assess the variation appearing in the younger manuscripts and assign all known manuscripts to particular text-groups and sub-text-groups.<sup>86</sup>

Based on the shared innovations present in the oldest tradition, we can distinguish three text-groups, which correspond to the grouping by scribe applied above. Group A includes manuscripts in Ásgeir Jónsson's hand (A193, A587, and T1768), which are derived from a common ancestor A that had to be very closely related to A601. Group B includes manuscripts in Jón Þórðarson's hand (A345, B4859, and L222), derived from a common ancestor B, which was also very closely related to A601. Finally, I decided to distinguish the third group, group C, which appears somewhat superficia when discussing exclusively the oldest manuscripts, as it includes only P67, seen as a direct descendant from A601. However, since both manuscripts are in Jón Eggertsson's hand, focusing on group C provides an opportunity to discuss the rationale behind some of the revisions Jón introduced in P67. Furthermore, in the following chapter, we will discuss some additional manuscripts that preserve texts classifi d as belonging to group C. The textual characteristics of each text-group are discussed in the following sections.

Text-group A

The manuscripts in text-group A preserve texts of 17HsG which contain a rather limited number of significa t variants. The shared readings that set this text-group apart from the remaining manuscripts include, for example:

A] B, C.

í upp að hjöltum] í völlinn upp að hjöltum.
 hann kom heim og krufði hana] hann kom heim og krufði Gedduna. að liðnum sex dögum] að liðnum fjóru dögum.<sup>87</sup>

It is important to emphasise the peculiarity of the firs reading, which suggests that the common ancestor of text-group A, which I call A, had to be copied after the deletion of 'völlinn' in A601 was made. A601 (f. 4r:24) has a deletion in this part of the text and the word ‘vøllinn’ is crossed over. Since the deletion is done in a brighter brown ink than the ink used for the main text, the original reading is still legible. The same treatment of deletion appears a bit further in the text where on f. 5r:1 of A601 ‘j vøllinn’ is crossed over in the same ink as the previous deletion and this reading does not appear in text-group A.

87. I present readings common to all discussed witnesses (both manuscripts and editions) in normalised Modern Icelandic orthography. In rare cases, when the text appears in quotation marks, this indicates a diplomatic transcription of a specifi text, and then the italicised text within quotation marks represents expansions of abbreviations.

The existence of A can be concluded because none of the extant manuscripts in group A could be an exemplar for the remaining one. T1768 could not be an exemplar for this tradition due to readings such as: herðamikill og sterkur] herðamikill, mikill og sterkur.

með kylfunni til dauða] með kylfunni blámenn til dauða.
hvaðan kattarkyn] hvaðan soddan kattarkyn.
÷] á lendar ofann.

Neither A193 nor A587 could be an exemplar, due to the innovations that texts of these two manuscripts share, such as:

A193, A587] T1768, B, C.

víst eru hraustur maður] víst eru hraustur.
÷] helldur en ræna kotkalla.
að grjót og steinar gengu upp] að grjót og stokkar gengu upp.

It is worth emphasising here that, in addition to the external factors discussed in the previous chapter, there is some textual evidence suggesting that A193 is a copy of A587, for example:

A193, A587] T1768, B, C.

d. hann var maður frægur] hann var frægur maður.
og (+ í A587) gaf hann] og í því gaf hann.

From a purely text-critical perspective, the most convincing example demonstrating that A193 is a copy of A587 is the reading ‘og í gaf hann’ in A587 (f. 2r-v) against ‘oc gaf hamm’ in A193 (f. 1v). The original reading, preserved in all other manuscripts, is ‘og í því gaf hann’. A587’s reading can be explained by a page break between ‘og í’ and ‘gaf hamm’. The omission of ‘því’ is an accidental error, which has been copied into A193, with the slight adjustment of removing the unnecessary ‘í’ from the text. Similarly noteworthy is the second example on the list above, where the letter ‘d’ that appears on f. 1r of A587 is under-dotted, indicating a deletion. A193 (f. 1r) copies the letter followed by a dot and keeps the meaningless ‘d’ in the text.

Other readings suggesting that A193 is a copy of A587, not the other way around, are instances where A587 preserves the original reading, shared with the rest of the tradition, while A193 introduces changes such as:

oc veit nu konungi lið] oc veit nu lið konungi.
er gó Hröngvið] sem gó Hröngvið.
og varð ei fyrr var við] hann varð eigi fyrr var við.

Meanwhile no such individual reading can be found in A587 as all innovations of A587 are also reproduced in A193.

Text-group B

Text-group B can be clearly distinguished based on various types of variant readings. First of all, these are shared innovations:

B] A, C.

þakkar kalli frá söguna] þakkar kalli fregn þessa.
þeir voru á veg komnir] þeir voru á leið komnir.

There are also some clear errors:

B] A, C.

Svílöð] Gunnlöð.
kú] ský.

Finally, there are numerous minor variants:

B] A, C.

að sér væri niður slept] þó sér væri niður slept.
sendimenn frá einum konungi] sendimenn frá nokkrum konungi.

nú segir Blindr draum sinn] nú segir Blindur enn einn draum sinn.

The two errors, mentioned in the list above, are clearly palaeographic errors. They most likely originate in the misreading of the characteristic letter forms used by Jón Eggertsson in A601. They suggest that L222, A345, and B4859 share a common ancestor, which I call B, and which introduced the two misreadings. The first one, considering the name of Hrómundur's mother 'Gunnlöð', is especially interesting. In the first chapter of the saga, when Hrómundur's mother is first introduced, all manuscripts preserve the name 'Gunnlöð'. It is only in the second occurrence of the name where 'Gunnlöð' becomes 'Svílöð', or more precisely 'Svylod' in A345, 'Svíjlaup' in B4859, and 'Svíj[0]oþ' in L222.

The common ancestor of text-group B was probably based directly on A601, as it seems that the capital 'G' was misread as 'S' and the small capital 'N' as 'y', see the reading of A601 in Figure 2.4. It seems rather unlikely that the error was introduced independently each time.

A similar situation appears in the misreading of ‘svört sky’ as ‘svört kü’ in L222 and B4859<sup>88</sup> or ‘svaart kv’ in A345.<sup>89</sup> This is a simple misreading of the ‘sk’-ligature which was used in A601. The ligature resembles the letter ‘k’ with a curved ascender, as represented in Figure 2.5, and was copied as ‘k’.

The texts classified as text-group B are probably not all direct descendants of their shared ancestor, which can be demonstrated by the following innovations in B4859 and L222:

konungur (+ varð miög reiður og L222) mælti, fyrir þessi þín orð skal Hrómundur heingður verða (gálgann gista L222), þótt hann sé frækinn (+ kallaður L222)] ÷.
er þér er vopnbært] er þú getur valdið.
mér þótti jarnhringur sleiginn] mér þótti jarnhringur settur.

These readings suggest that B4859 and L222 were both descendants of a common ancestor, which in turn was a sibling of A345. On the stemma, I represented this intermediary common ancestor as B<sub>0</sub> (Figure 2.3).

It needs to be mentioned that in each of these manuscripts, there are also peculiar readings which exclude the possibility that any of them could have served as an exemplar for another manuscript in this group. A345 could not be the exemplar for B4859 and L222 because of readings such as:

A345] B4859, L222, A, C.

Eitt sinn héllt Ólafur norður] Eitt sinn héllt Ólafur austur.
lítt mannstu það sagði hún] lítt mannstu nú, sagði hún.
er þeim mætti ad liði Halldingja] er þeim mætti.

B4859 cannot be the exemplar for A345 and L222 because of readings such as:

B4859] A345, L222, A, C.

88. The reading could also be ‘svört kii’ in both L222 and B4859 as the ‘ü’ looks like the double ‘i’.

89. The superscript ‘r’ in A345 appears between ‘v’ and ‘a’ and could be expanded as ‘svarat’.

að þora ekki að veita lið konungi] að þora ekki að veita konungi lið.

enn sverðið sótt] og renndi sverðið.

L222 cannot be the exemplar for B4859 and A345 because of readings such as:

L222] A345, B4859, A, C.

er þú drapst frillu þína] er þú drapst sjálfur frillu þína.

Text-group C

Revealing the relationship between A601 and P67 is quite straightforward. If we focus exclusively on major type-two variants,<sup>90</sup> used to determine the relationships between the main text-groups, then P67 always agrees with A601. This does not, however, mean that P67 preserves the same text as A601, nor that it is a reliable copy of A601. There are numerous innovations exclusive to P67, which include:

- changes in word order:

P67] A601, A, B.

þetta sá Hröngviður] Hröngviður sá þetta.

hann gaf eitt sinn þeim manni er Hrókur hét gullhring góðan] hann gaf einum manni þeim er Hrókur hét eitt sinn gullhring góðan.

- changes in lexicon and/or meaning:

P67] A601, A, B.

90. For a definition of type-two variants, see Greg, The Calculus of Variants, an Essay on Textual Criticism; Kapitan, ‘A Choice of Relationship-Revealing Variants for a Cladistic Analysis of Old Norse Texts: Some Methodological Considerations’.

og þar fyrir vil ég] og þar fyrir skal ég.
 og heim] og norður til (†danmerkur† A601) síns ríkis.
 að sínu ríki] að landi sínu.
 mér man vera mál að höggva] mér man vera mál úr haugnum.
 þá féll draugurinn] þá datt draugurinn.

- þá var orðið mjög myrkt] þá var orðið mjög dimmt.
- minor changes of, for example, prepositions and adverbs:

P67] A601, A, B.

þar var með einn dreki] þar var einn dreki.
 og spryr eftir] og spryr.
 Kári hafði nú fengið] Kári hafði fengið.
 síðan gengu] eptir það gengu.
 ganga inn í] ganga í.

There are countless instances where P67 preserves different readings from all other examined manuscripts, most of them very minor changes in syntax or function words, but also some substantial changes. Two of them are the most striking.

The first one appears in the very first sentence of the saga, where A601 reads ‘(S)á kongr rieþe fyrir {Gordom} `í danmörk` er Olafur hiet’, where í Danmörk is a supralinear addition, which had been deleted together with the inline Görðum, but P67 on f. 102v simply reads ‘(S)á kongur riede fi er Gördum er Ólafur hiet’. In the same vein, another change from síns ríkis to heim is important. A601 (f. 3r:15–16) reads: ‘Sigldi olafr kongr sua þadann, oc norþr til {danmerkr} ‘sinz ríjkis’’ where the name of the country is deleted and an addition is made in the left margin which reads ‘sinz ríjkis’. All manuscripts, except for P67, reproduce this sentence in its corrected form: Sigldi Ólafur konungur svá þaðan og norður til síns ríkis, but P67 is the only manuscript that reads: Sigldi Ólafur konungur svá þaðan og heim.

These striking examples of individual readings introduced in P67, together with the accumulation of minor variants, tell us something about Jón Eggertsson’s intentions and the expectations of the intended audiences of these volumes. They suggest that Jón did not want to present Ólafur as a king of Denmark.<sup>91</sup>

While A601 might be seen as a draft, where there is space for correction and deletion, P67 preserves a clean text of the saga, without any extensive scribal corrections and, more importantly, without any mentions of Denmark. While A601 is densely written with many abbreviations, P67, with its large format, wide margins, decorated initials, and clear script, is one of the most beautiful extant manuscripts of the saga. It is written in a clear chancery fratura script and, unlike many Icelandic manuscripts, it does not have any abbreviations. As Regina Jucknies observed, a sparse amount of abbreviation was a typical feature of manuscripts that Jón prepared for the Swedes in order to make the text more legible.<sup>92</sup>

In order to achieve a full overview of the relationships between these two important manuscripts, their texts were closely compared to the rímur. While we can find noteworthy references to the rímur, including work by Kölbing, Brown, and Andrews, the readings of the rímur were never used to shed light on the relationship between P67 and A601, the two ‘authorial’ copies of the seventeenth-century saga.<sup>93</sup> Even though finding clear verbal correspondence between the saga and the rímur is challenging, by comparing the examples in which A601 preserves different readings than P67 alongside the text of Griplur, we can note that from 43 examined instances, P67 agrees with the rímur six times, and ironically A601 also agrees with the rímur six times. In the remaining examples it is impossible to determine which text is closer to the rímur, and there the saga texts are actually closer to each other. This quantitative comparison does not definitely suggest which manuscript preserves more original readings, but it opens up the possibility that Jón was using Griplur while revising the text for P67.

91. For a more detailed discussion of this, see Kapitan, ‘When a King of Norway Became a King of Russia: Transmission and Reception of Hrómundar Saga Greipssonar in Scholarly Networks of Early Modern Scandinavia’, 337–340.

92. Jucknies, Der Horizont eines Schreibers, Jón Eggertsson (1643–89) und seine Handschriften, 96.

93. It must be noted here that Brown was aware of Andrews’ conclusion that A601 preserves the best text of the saga, but she still compared only the texts of the editions, namely the edition of Griplur by Finnur Jónsson and the edition of 17HsG by Rafn, ignoring all unique readings preserved in manuscripts of the saga or the rímur.

Chapter divisions

The division of a given text into chapters in post-medieval manuscripts can sometimes help to determine, or at least confirm the groupings of texts. This approach has been successfully applied by Lavender in his work on Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra.<sup>94</sup> In the case of the oldest part of the 17HsG tradition, this is unfortunately not really the case. In L222, the saga is divided into six chapters, while all the remaining manuscripts (A193, A587, A345, B4859, A601, P67, and T1768) divide the text into five chapters. Even though these chapter divisions do not help us to confirm the text-groups identified in the oldest tradition, they are useful in distinguishing which younger texts of 17HsG were derived from L222 (see Figure 3.1 in Chapter 3).

Additionally, it is worth noting here that the printed editions of the saga always divide the text into ten chapters. This was first introduced by Björner in his 1737 edition and has since been consistently reproduced by all other editors and translators. The edition presented here is the first one ever that is actually faithful to the presentation of the saga in manuscripts.

Postscript

One of the common features appearing in some of the manuscripts is a postscript, or a short note which follows the saga. Four of the manuscripts, A193, A587, A601, and T1768, preserve this note, which very briefly discusses the contents of the saga and the saga's exemplar. The note in A601 (reproduced in Figure 2.2) reads as follows:

Suu Saga Sem þetta var Efft r Skriffa vard | Naumlega lessenn. Og ei Sem Skilianlegust umm | Landa edur Stada heite Sum, bö er þad vyst ad | Räda hier aff kong Olaffu mune vered haff | kongur ad naff böt i {danmerkur} {noreg} vellde Einhvörstadar | þar Sem Nær grendsat heffu vid Suýþjöd. þuj þä | heffu {Danmerkur} {Noreg} Ryke haff marga Smä konga Sem, | bevysast kann aff fornum frædum. So skriffar sira Magnus | i laufase Olaffs on, etc. (A601, f. 6r).

94. Lavender, Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra: The Saga of Illugi, Gríður's Foster-son, 93, 102.

(The saga from which this was transcribed was barely readable and not at all clear concerning some of the names of countries or places, but it can clearly be understood that King Ólafur held the title of king somewhere in the realm of {Denmark} †Norway† near the border with Sweden, because, at that time, the kingdom of {Denmark} †Norway† had many petty kings, as demonstrated in ancient lore. Thus writes Sr. Magnús Ólafsson from Laufás.)

The note was already a subject of scholarly interest for Árni Magnússon, who wrote in the margin of A601 ‘mendacium est. þetta er teked ur Rimunum’ doubting the information provided by the note that the saga is copied from an old and potentially badly damaged volume. In modern scholarship, there has been a heated discussion about whether the first sentence of the note refers to a lost exemplar of the prose, or whether it can refer to rímur and what role Magnús Ólafsson from Laufás played in the saga’s creation.<sup>95</sup> Andrews proposed a plausible explanation of the reference to Magnús Ólafsson. He observed, apparently relying on Kålund’s suggestion, that it may be exclusively the information about many kings of Denmark that relies on Magnús’ account, not the saga. This seems a reasonable explanation, especially if we interpret ‘etc.’ at the end of the note as a reference to other authorities of the time, who had perhaps equal prestige as Magnús.

Regarding the exemplar of the saga, a hypothesis was proposed by Jesch suggesting that the word ‘saga’ could be loosely used in the seventeenth century for rímur, and therefore the note might refer to damaged text of the rímur on which the saga is based, rather than to the damaged exemplar of the saga. While this seems to be a quite reasonable explanation, Jesch built her argument using the case of Skáld-Helga saga.<sup>96</sup> She refers to Jón Helgason’s and Ólafur Halldórrsson’s accounts on that matter.<sup>97</sup> In my view, however, there is no convincing argument that any reference to Skáld-

97. Jón Helgason, ‘Til Hauksbóks historie i det 17. århundrede’, 36; Ólafur Halldórrsson, Grænland í miðaldaritum, 171, 259.

Helga saga actually refers to the rímur, rather than a saga. While the lexical and semantic connotations of the term saga in itself might require further examination, considering the evidence at hand, it seems quite possible that the note implies that the manuscript to which I refer as *JE 27 4to, the manuscript of Griplur that Jón Eggertsson obtained in Iceland and brought to Sweden, was in a rather poor condition. Given the condition of other known manuscripts of Griplur, it is easy to imagine that it was badly damaged and partially illegible. For example, Cod. Guelf. 42.7. Aug. 4to preserves a defective text of Griplur, while AM 603 4to used to preserve Griplur, but they are now lost.<sup>98</sup>

Another notable feature of the postscript, which has not been discussed until very recently, are the two deletions and corrections present in A601, both dealing with the geography of the saga. Thanks to multi spectral imaging, it has recently been possible to reveal the text of the correction.<sup>99</sup> In both cases the name of the country Denmark was deleted and corrected with a supralinear addition to Norway. This supralinear addition, however, was also deleted at a later stage. All manuscripts in text-group A preserve the postscript with Norway, not Denmark; A193 and A587 almost verbatim, and T1768 in a slightly revised form.<sup>100</sup> This gives us valuable insight into the early transmission and reception of the saga when the geographic relevance of the text played a significant role for the scholarly and antiquarian circles involved in the early circulation of the saga.

Manuscript context

Sixty-three different sagas appear together with 17HsG in the oldest manuscripts, among them legendary sagas, chivalric sagas, sagas and tales of Icelanders, and even kings' sagas. Only eight of them, however, appear with 17HsG more than once. These are: Bragða-Ölvis saga, Bósa saga og Herrauðs, Hervarar saga og Heiðreks, Knýtlingsaga, Möttuls saga, Stjörnu-Odda draumur, Svarfdæla saga, and Valdimars saga.

It is important to emphasise that one saga predominantly co-occurs with 17HsG: Bragða-Ölvis saga. Bragða-Ölvis saga appears with 17HsG in 50% of manuscripts, i.e., 4 out of 8. This needs to be viewed in the context that two out of these eight manuscripts (A193 and A587) today are single-text manuscripts preserving exclusively 17HsG.

The co-occurrence of Bragða-Ölvis saga with 17HsG cannot be accidental. Bragða-Ölvis saga, is also a rímur-based narrative, and its textual tradition also traces its origins to A601.<sup>101</sup> Furthermore, as discussed in the previous chapter, Jón Eggertsson is most likely also responsible for converting Bragða-Ölvis rímur into prose. This is not only because both sagas can be found in A601, which is written in Jón's hand, but also because both sets of rímur were registered in *JE 27 4to.<sup>102</sup> It seems quite possible that these two texts travelled together in the earliest manuscripts due to their common origins, authorship, and/or style. While the potential literary similarities between 17HsG and Bragða-Ölvis saga lie outside the scope of this study, their co-occurrence awakens further questions regarding the shared transmission histories of various Norse texts.

The topic of pairs, or groups of texts being frequently transmitted together in manuscripts has been gaining scholarly interest in past years. Recently, N. Kivilcim Yavuz has, for example, observed a cluster of manuscripts in which Dares of Phrygia's De excidio Troiae historia appear frequently with Geoff ey of Monmouth's De gestis Britonum, which might have influenced the shared transmission of their Norse adaptations, Trójumanna saga and Breta sögur.<sup>103</sup> In my recent work, I suggested that the manuscript context in Until then, we have to rely on case studies of individual texts, such as the present study, to explore and understand the changing factors influencing the transmission of texts. As will be further discussed in the following chapter, in the case of the transmission history of HsG, some patterns of co-occurrence can be observed, especially regarding the rationale for putting certain texts together in the case of manuscripts derived from printed editions, see Section 3.3.

Chapter 3

Younger manuscripts of 17HsG

The previous chapter focused on the oldest manuscripts of 17HsG and revealed A601 as the archetype of this tradition. It classified all eight extant seventeenth century manuscripts into three groups: text-group A, including the texts written mainly by Ásgeir Jónsson, text-group B, including the texts written by Jón Þórðarson, and text-group C, including P67, written by Jón Eggertsson. This chapter turns towards the younger manuscripts of the saga, twenty-two in total, which were written in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Unlike the case of the oldest manuscripts, it is impossible to group the younger manuscripts by scribe, therefore, this chapter starts with introducing groups of manuscripts based on textual criteria and then proceeds to discuss individual manuscripts belonging to each group. While the main focus is on the textual relationships among the texts of 17HsG and the innovations they introduced, at times, when relevant for the argument, I also discuss the material aspects of individual manuscripts, their origins, and their history of ownership.

It is worth emphasising here that it is in this part of the tradition where a new version of the saga, the eighteenth-century version, appears (18HsG), which is separately edited (the edition begins on ??). This version is preserved in two manuscripts, Lbs 840 4to (L840) and JS 634 4to (J634), which are classified as text-group B<sub>1</sub>, and which are discussed further in this chapter (see p. 124).

The extent of variation appearing in the younger manuscripts is quite overwhelming, with countless minor changes introduced independently at different stages of transmission. Despite the large amount of textual innovations, some of the major variant readings introduced in the oldest manuscripts can still be traced in the younger manuscripts and allow us to group them accordingly. One of the readings that allowed us to distinguish group A from B and C is, for example, the reading hana for gedduna. This reading appears in the section describing Hagall's fishin trip in chapter 4 of the present edition. After a successful fishin trip, Hagall brings home a large fis in whose stomach he find Hrómundur's sword.

A] B, C.

In the younger manuscripts we can see this variant reproduced quite consistently, with only eight manuscripts preserving the original reading of A601, 'gedduna', and nine preserving the variant reading derived from A587. One manuscript omits this phrase completely, and four provide an alternative reading in this particular place of variation, but elsewhere agree with A-group readings. The distribution is as follows:<sup>1</sup>

- og krufði gedduna A395, Acc61, B4875, J634, K614, L633, L840, M936.
- og krufði hana B11108, I43, J102, L1217, L2316, L2943, L3164, L3795, L4460.
- krufði G52, L381, L1767, M27.
- ÷ L4825.

Among the readings that allowed us to distinguish group B from the remaining manuscripts in the oldest tradition was, for example, the amusing misreading of ský as kú. It appears in the sections describing Blindur's prophetic dreams in chapter fi e of this edition. In his dream, Blindur sees black clouds arriving over the kingdom, which is clearly supposed to be a bad omen that king misinterprets. However, in B-group manuscripts, it is a black cow that arrives.

B] A, C.

kú] ský.

1. In this section, the manuscripts are listed alphabetically by shelfmarks.

This reading made its way to younger manuscripts which allows us to easily distinguish texts belonging to group B. If cows are attacking Sweden, then the text is a B-type text. The majority of manuscripts, fifty in total, preserve the original reading ský, six preserve the variant with cows, and one manuscript has a lacuna in this part of the text, but elsewhere it agrees with B-group readings:

- ský Acc61, B11108, G52, I43, J102, L381, L1217, L1767, L2316, L2943, L3164, L3795, L4460, M27, M936.
- kú A395,, L633, L4825.
- kýr B4875, J634, K614.
- lacuna L840.

Finally, text group C can be identified by the innovations introduced in P67. Among them is the reading heim for síns ríkis in chapter 2 of the present edition. It appears at the end of the episode in which Hrómundur confronts Práinn, a barrow-dweller and a former king of Valland. After killing Práinn, Hrómundur keeps Práinn's ring, necklace and sword for himself, distributing the rest of Práinn's wealth among Ólafur's companions, and afterwards they all head back home.

C] A, B. heim] síns ríkis.

Similarly, in this case, we can find the reading derived from P67 in the younger manuscripts. If King Ólafur sails back home, instead of sailing to his kingdom (or to Denmark), then we are dealing with a C-type text. There are only two manuscripts that preserve the reading 'heim', four that read 'Danmerkur', and in the remaining texts we read either 'síns ríkis' or 'ríkis síns'.

J102	No clear chapter division

Furthermore, the chapter division of the saga, as presented in Figure 3.1, reveals three patterns, which are useful in distinguishing the textual sub-groups. In the majority of manuscripts, the saga is divided into five chapters, and this division originates from A601. Two manuscripts, L222 and B4875, divide the saga into six chapters, while another two, L840 and J634 divide it into eight chapters. Finally, there are six manuscripts that have ten chapters and these seem to be derived from the printed editions, which also divide the saga into ten chapters. J102 is the only manuscript that does not have any clear chapter division.

Taking into consideration both the chapter division and the richness of the textual variation, a number of text-sub-groups can be distinguished. Within text-group A, there are three text-sub-groups consisting of the following younger manuscripts:

- Sub-group A<sub>1</sub>: G52, L381, L1767, and M27.
- Sub-group A<sub>2</sub>: B11108, I43, L1217, L3164.
- Sub-group A<sub>3</sub>: J102, L2316, L2943, L3795, L4460.

Within text-group B there are five text-sub-groups consisting of the following younger manuscripts:

- Sub-group B<sub>1</sub>: L840 and J634.
- Sub-group B<sub>2</sub>: B4875.
- Sub-group B<sub>3</sub>: L633 and A395.

- Sub-group B<sub>4</sub>: K614.
- Sub-group B<sub>5</sub>: L4825.

Within text-group C there are the following younger manuscripts:

- Acc61
- M936.

A textual analysis revealed that text-sub-group A<sub>3</sub> consists of manuscripts preserving texts derived from Rafn's edition, while text-group C consists of manuscripts based on Björner's edition. This allows a comparison of the types of variants introduced in the two groups. Therefore, the manuscripts based on the printed editions, text-group A<sub>3</sub> and C, are treated separately in Section 3.3. The remaining manuscripts are discussed according to their groupings, so text-group A is discussed in Section 3.1 and text-group B is discussed in Section 3.2.<sup>2</sup>

---

2. It is worth noting here that while it may seem unusual from the reader's perspective to distinguish text sub-groups containing only one or two manuscripts, this is a deliberate decision aimed at highlighting the innovations introduced in particular manuscripts. The intention is that when new manuscripts of 17HsG are discovered, or those currently in private collections become accessible in public libraries for research, it will hopefully be relatively easy to determine which text sub-group they belong to.

3.1 Text-group A

The younger manuscripts in text-group A can be further classified into at least three text-sub-groups: A<sub>1–3</sub>. As illustrated in Figure 3.2, none of them derived directly from Ásgeir Jónsson's manuscripts. Text-sub-groups A<sub>1</sub> and A<sub>2</sub> share a common ancestor, to which I will refer as A<sub>0</sub>. Text sub-group A<sub>3</sub> is based on Rafn's edition. A<sub>0</sub> can be distinguished, because it most likely introduced the following innovation, which is not present in any of the older A-group manuscripts:

T1768, A587, A193, A<sub>3</sub>, B, C] A<sub>1</sub>, A<sub>2</sub>, ragur ok blauður] rágur og duglaus 'og (÷ M27, L1767, L381, G52) 'sért þú (sittu L3164) ekki 'blauður (duglaus M27).

Even though there are not many examples of readings which are reproduced in an unchanged form in all manuscripts in text-groups A<sub>1–2</sub>, A<sub>0</sub> seems to be more closely related to A587 than to T1768. The innovations introduced in T1768, discussed in Section 3.4.1, are not reproduced in the descendants of A<sub>0</sub>, such as the omissions:

T1768] A587, A193, A<sub>1</sub>, A<sub>2</sub>, A<sub>3</sub>, B, C.<sup>3</sup> ÷] (+ alt L3164) á lendar 'ofann (÷ L3164).
 með kylfunni til dauða] með kylfunni blámenn til dauða.

At the same time, the descendants of A<sub>0</sub> reproduce the innovations of A587, such as the omission:

A587, A193, A<sub>1</sub>, A<sub>2</sub>] T1768, A<sub>3</sub>, B, C.
 ÷] helldur en ræna kotkalla.

Since all innovations of A587 are reproduced in A193, and the individual innovations of A193 are very minor, it is impossible to build a strong argument that A<sub>0</sub> was related to one rather than the other.

---

3. Note that there is additional minor variation in text-groups B and C, which is not registered here, as the analytical focus is on group A.

Text-group A<sub>1</sub>

The four manuscripts of text-group A<sub>1</sub> are (in chronological order):

- Lbs 381 fol. (L381), 17HsG written in 1801,
- Ms Germ qu. 27 (M27), 17HsG written in 1806,
- G-52/1 (G52), dated to ca. 1815–1828,
- Lbs 1767 4to (L1767), 17HsG written in 1860.

Lbs 381 fol.

tion and permissible pastime, in spare time again transcribed at Stóra-Ásgeirsá in Viðidal by Tómas Tómasson, student of the fatherland's history Anno Domini 1790.

According to the information provided on the title page, L381 was written in 1790, but the only text actually dated to this year is Örvar-Odds saga, or more precisely three Hrafnistumannasögur collected under the common rubric: 'Sagann af | AURVAR=ODDE OG PEIM | fedgum'.

The main part of the manuscript was written by Tómas Tómasson (1756–1811), a hreppstjóri (a district administrative officer) from Stóra-Ásgeirsá in Northern Iceland.<sup>6</sup> According to the dates given in the colophons, the majority of the sagas were copied in 1803 and 1805. There is no clear overlap between the text boundary and quire boundary, and the texts, which are followed by a colophon, appear in what appears to be the relative chronological order of writing: Hulðar saga (no colophon), Hrafnistumannasögur (24 December 1790), 17HsG (19 February 1801), Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra (20 February 1803), Porsteins saga Vikingssonar (13 March 1803), Hálfdanar saga svarta (7 April 1803), Hrings saga og Skjaldar (13 April 1805), Friðbjófs saga 6 May 1805, Starkaðar saga gamla (no colophon). The last item of the manuscript, Andra saga jarls (no colophon), is a later addition, written by Einar Bjarnason (1782–1856), a prolific scribe from Mælifell in Northern Iceland.<sup>7</sup> According to Páll Eggert Ólason, this addition can be dated to around 1820.<sup>8</sup>

Both scribes were very active copyists of their times. According to Handrit.org, Tómas Tómasson has been identified as the scribe of at least seven manuscripts in Landsbókasafn Íslands, while Einar Bjarnason is credited with over sixty.<sup>9</sup> Tómas Tómasson, who describes himself on the title page as a student of the fatherland's history, demonstrates his wide knowledge of Icelandic literature by commenting on the contents of some of the texts and by drawing the reader's attention to the inter-textual relationships; for example in notes following Örvar-Odds saga (p. 139) or 17HsG(p. 150). The latter one reads:

J síðasta Kapitula Hrólfs Saugo Sturlaugssonar; er kalllaz þar Gaungo Hrólfr; segir; at Olafr kongr og Systr hans | haf Verit Bórn Hrólfs, enn hér eru þau börn Gnodar | Asmundar.

(In the last chapter of the saga of Hrólfur Sturlaugsson, who is called there Göngu-Hrólfur, it is said that king Ólafur and his sisters were children of Hrólfs, but here they are children of Gnoð-Ásmundur.)

This attention paid to family relationships resembles closely Torfæus' marginalia in A587, discussed in Section 2.2, bearing witness to Tómas's deep interest in Nordic history. His erudition is also expressed in other, shorter marginal notes that accompany 17HsG. They draw attention to the main events of the saga, and possible 'factual' discrepancies between 17HsG and other sagas. These are:

- 'Siá Sógu | Hálfs kongs' (f. 71v:7–8, paginated 140).
- 'atgerfe | Hrómundar' (f. 71v:12–13, p. 140).
- 'fall Hraunglvidar Berserks' (f. 72r:21, p. 141).
- 'afdrif | Práins' (f. 73v:8, p. 144).
- 'fall | Helga | frækna' (f. 75r:3–4, p. 147).
- 'dráp | Vola' (f. 75r:17–18, p. 147).
- '[0000] | Hrólm:'<sup>10</sup> (f. 75r:20–21, p. 147).
- 'Siá | Gaungo-|Hrólfs | Saugo | 26. Cap.' (f. 75r:24–27, p. 147).
- 'brógd | karl' (f. 75v:21–22, p. 148).
- List of Blindur's dreams: 'Draumr | Blinds | 1<sup>te</sup>' (f. 75v:28–30, p. 148), '2<sup>r</sup>' (f. 76r:3, p. 149), '3<sup>ie</sup>' (f. 76r:7, p. 149), '4<sup>de</sup>', (f. 76r:11, p. 149), '5<sup>te</sup>' (f. 76r:14, p. 149), '6<sup>te</sup>' (f. 76r:17, p. 149), '7<sup>de</sup>' (f. 76r:19, p. 149), '8<sup>de</sup>' (f. 76r:24, p. 149), '9<sup>de</sup>' (f. 76r:29, p. 149).
- 'al: | Halldíngur' (f. 76v:4–5, p. 150).
- 'fall | Haddings | kongs' (f. 76v:15–16, p. 150).
- 'Blindr | hengdr' (f. 76v:17–18, p. 150).

10. This marginal note is unclear. There seems to be a #-like symbol, or double 't' above four characters, 'e' being the first one, 'ð' or 's' with an er-abbreviation above being the second one, 'l' being the third, and 'n', 'r' or 'e' being the fourth. The note appears alongside the passage where Hrómundur counts his wounds and mentions his eight dead brothers.

Most of these marginal notes serve as navigational aids (or finding aids), drawing the reader's attention to the most important events of the saga, such as the deaths of Hröngviður, Helgi, Hadding, and Blindur. Some of them, however, focus on the inter-textual context. For example, the note 'sjá sögu Hálfs kongs' (p. 140) where the text introduces Gunnlöð as Hrómundur's mother expresses the scribe's awareness that in Hálfs saga og Hálfssrekkja Gunnlöð is introduced as the daughter of Hrókur hin svarti, and mother of Hrómundur. Similarly, the notes on p. 150, which bring to the reader's attention that Haddingjar and Halldingjar might refer to the same characters, suggesting that the scribe was well versed in saga literature. Finally, the note 'sjá Göngu-Hrólfs Sögo 26. Kap.' (p. 147) by the part of the text describing Svanhvít's help to Hrómundur after the battle must be referring to chapter 36 of Göngu-Hrólfs saga, according to Rafn's edition,<sup>11</sup> which describes how Dagný and Dagbjört, daughters of Hrólfur and sisters of Ólafur, healed Hrómundur.<sup>12</sup> This marginal note, together with the aforementioned commentary following 17HsG, can be treated as examples of eighteenth-century textual criticism in action. The scribe acts, to some extent, as an editor of the text, bringing his critical observations to the reader's attention.

Not much else is known about the history of L381 until it was donated to Landsbókasafn Íslands in 1923 by Benedikt Sigfússon from Bakki (1859–1932). This is confirmed by a note written on a separate slip of paper, which reads 'Gefi 12/4 1923 | af Benidikt Si[g]fússyni | frá Bakka í Vansdal'.

Ms Germ qu. 27

Ms Germ qu. 27 (M27), held in the Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin – Preußischer Kulturbesitz in Berlin, is a paper manuscript in quarto format which contains a total of i+137-i leaves of watermarked paper. The manuscript starts with a table of contents in Icelandic, followed by a table of contents in German (later addition) and the following sagas: Reykdæla saga, Valla-Ljóts saga, Vopnfirðinga saga,

11. Rafn, Fornaldar sögur Nordrlanda eptir gömlum handritum, III:362–363.

12. It is uncertain which manuscript 'version' or 'edition' of the saga the scribe is referring to. The same episode appears, for example, in chapter 37 of AM 152 fol., see Fellows-Jensen and Lavender, Göngu-Hrólfs saga.

Brandkrossa þáttur, Droplaugarsonar saga, Hákonar þáttur Hárekssonar, Þorsteins þáttur forvitna, Þorsteins þáttur Austfirðings, Bragða-Ölvis saga, 17HsG (ff 80v–85v), Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar, Göngu-Hrólfs saga.

The manuscript is written in one hand throughout, and most of the texts appearing in M27 are accompanied by colophons containing the year of copying and sometimes the name of the scribe. Most of the colophons provide only the year, 1806, but the last item in the manuscript is followed by a note ‘Ritad á qvennabrecku árit 1806, lokit 31. Maji 1 af Th: Thorsteinsyni’ (f. 137r). The scribe’s full name can be expanded based on the title pages of other manuscripts in his hand, as all the manuscripts under the shelfmarks Ms Germ qu. 25–28 are mostly in the hand of Pórður Þorsteinsson (1760–1846) and his name is written out in full on the title pages of Ms Germ qu. 25 and Ms Germ qu. 26.<sup>13</sup>

Pórður Þorsteinsson took the offi of vicar on Snæfellsnes from 1785 and served, for example, in Breiðavíkurþing from 1796, while he was most likely living in Stóri-Kambur, and later in Kvennabrekka from 1804.<sup>14</sup> The names of both of these locations are attested in the manuscripts he copied: Kvennabrekka is mentioned a number of times in the colophons of M27, while Stóri-Kambur is found in the colophons of Ms Germ qu. 26. The title page of Ms Germ qu. 26 indicates that the texts of the manuscript were all copied by Pórður Þorsteinsson at Stóri-Kambur, but the title page itself was supplied by the bookbinder.<sup>15</sup>

M27 contains an added leaf with a table of contents in German, which includes not only the translations of the saga titles but also a short commentary. The same hand can be found on the supplied leaves in Ms Germ qu. 25, Ms Germ qu. 26, and Ms Germ qu. 28. In Ms Germ qu. 26, after a lengthy comment regarding the fourth item in the manuscript, there is a signature ‘Rühs’, which must refer to Christian Friedrich Rühs (1781–1820), a German historian and professor of history at the University of Berlin.<sup>16</sup> The commentary in M27, as well as the physical features of this manuscript, suggest the mainly textual interests of Christian Friedrich Rühs. He not only compared the texts of this manuscript with the printed editions (as his note ‘sind in der Björnerschen Sammlung aber ungenau abgedruckt’ indicates) but we can also assume that he intended to work with these texts frequently, as he added numbered tabs or labels on small slips of paper to the fore-edge of the manuscripts for easy access to the texts.

It is unknown how M27 and the remaining three manuscripts in the Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin made their way to Germany and got into Rühs’s possession, and no information about this can be found in the manuscripts examined. It is known, however, that Christian Friedrich Rühs was in contact with Scandinavian scholars, including Rasmus Nyerup (1759–1829), a Danish literary historian and librarian at the University of Copenhagen,<sup>17</sup> and Peter Adam Wallmark (1777–1858), a Swedish author and librarian at the Royal Library in Stockholm,<sup>18</sup> since he mentions them as his friends in his Die Edda nebst einer Einleitung über nordische Poesie und Mythologie und mit einem Anhang über die historische Literatur der Isländer.<sup>19</sup> It is possible that he received these manuscripts through his Scandinavian network for the purpose of his further studies in the history of Scandinavia.

G-52/1

G-52/1 (G52), held in the Héraðsskjalasafn Akureyrarbæjar og Eyjafjarðarsýlu in Akureyri, is a paper manuscript in octavo format which contains a total of 58 leaves of watermarked paper. The manuscript is written in a single hand which has not yet been identified in other manuscripts. 17HsG is the first item in the manuscript, preserved on ff 1r–10v followed by Styrbjarnar þáttur Svíakappa, Skálða

16. Westrin et al., Nordisk familjebok. Konversationslexikon och realencyklopedi, XXIII:1347–1348.

19. Rühs, Die Edda nebst einer Einleitung über nordische Poesie und Mythologie und mit einem Anhang über die historische Literatur der Isländer, iii.

Based on the information given in the colophons, G52 can be dated to 1815–1828. Sigurðar þáttur slevu, for example, was written on 2 March 1828, while Grænlendinga þáttur was written in 1815. It is unknown when the other texts in the manuscript were copied, but on ff 22+23 there is a watermark with the date ‘1808’, so the copying of Skálða saga, the text that is written on ff 14v–25v, cannot pre-date the year 1808.<sup>20</sup>

If we were to believe the colophons, the manuscript contains an interesting collection of texts copied from parchment exemplars, as well as from printed editions; one of the items, Hálfs saga og Hálfsrekka, is copied from a printed edition, as the colophon on f. 49r suggests: ‘Skrifud eptir svenscu Exemplar prentudu’, while, for example, Skálða saga is copied from a parchment exemplar ‘Skrifad eptir skinnbók’, according to the colophon on f. 25v.

The manuscript was in the possession of Árni Bjarnarson (1910–1992), a bookseller and publisher from Akureyri, who obtained the manuscript during his travels to Canada. The manuscript came to the Archives in Akureyri in 1994, after Árni Bjarnarson’s death, and the only note that can be found about this donation is that it arrived as a parcel of 24 boxes containing various materials. The collection today is divided into two parts: ‘Ýmislegt frá Árna Bjarnarsyni’ and ‘Handrit frá Vesturheimi komin frá Árna Bjarnarsyni’. The latter is catalogued under the shelfmark G-52, which includes 46 items divided into four boxes (items 1–29, 30–37, 38–41, 42–46). G52 is the first item in the collection (G52/1).

Lbs 1767 4to

Lbs 1767 4to (L1767), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík,<sup>21</sup> is a paper manuscript in quarto which contains ii+300 leaves. The manuscript opens with a table of contents, followed by Sigurðar saga þögla, Blómsturvalla saga, Dínus saga drambláta, Hálfdanar

20. Kapitan, ‘Dating Paper Manuscripts Based on Watermarks: A Case Study of Selected Nineteenth-Century Icelandic Manuscripts’.

21. Páll Eggert Ólason, Skrá, I:592–593.

saga gamla, Ambáles saga, Gríshildar saga góðu, Úlfs saga Uggasonar, Gests saga og Gnatus, Sigurðar saga turnara, Sagan af Hákonni norræna, Jónatas ævintýri, 17HsG (ff 117r–120r), Bósa saga og Herrauðs, Illuga saga Tagldarbana, Bærings saga, Vilhjálms saga sjóðs, Rémundar saga keisarasonar, Þorsteins saga Víkingssonar, Hektors saga, Rauðulfs þáttr, Marons saga sterka, Hermanns saga illa, Andra saga jarls, Skanderbeg saga, Parmes saga Loðinbjarnar, and Starkaðar saga gamla. 17HsG is followed by a colophon which reads ‘þann 1ta Marts 1860 af J.J.S.’

The manuscript is written in one hand throughout, which can be identified as the hand of Jóhannes Jónsson (1798–1877), a bóndi at Smyrlahóll in Dalasýsla in the years 1831–1862.<sup>22</sup> The same hand can be found in JS 203 8vo, which is a register of texts written by Jóhannes Jónsson in his own hand, and in a manuscript catalogued on Handit.org as Einkaeign 10.<sup>23</sup>

Jóhannes Jónsson is generally known as Jóhannes the blind, as he was thought to have lost his sight in the last 20 years of his life.<sup>24</sup> However, as Lavender observed, Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra in his hand is followed by a colophon with the date 1864, while the last item in the same manuscript is dated to 1867, so it is unlikely that he suffered from complete blindness at that time.<sup>25</sup> Likewise, L1767 was written between 1857 and 1863, so already in the period when Jóhannes was presumed to be already visually impaired, but the script of the manuscript does not suggest that.

The register of texts copied by Jóhannes, in JS 203 8vo, does not mention 17HsG, but according to the title page of JS 203 8vo, the main focus of the register is approximately on the years 1818–1856, so L1767 falls outside of the scope of the register. It is worth noting here that there is another manuscript preserving 17HsG which has been previously attributed to Jóhannes' hand, L1217, which also falls out of the scope of the register either because it is too early or because it is not Jóhannes who copied it (see further discussion in Section 3.1).

Einkaeign 10 must be the same manuscript as ‘Jón Jónsson’s Sagnahandrit’ (Lavender, ‘Whatever Happened to Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra?: Origin, Transmission and Reception of a Fornaldarsaga’, 108, 481), and it is held in the Héraðsskjalasafn Borgarfjarða.

Textual relationships in A<sub>1</sub>

A<sub>1</sub> manuscripts distinguish themselves from the rest of the A-tradition by very clear changes made to the text. Below there are a few examples where M27, L1767, L381, and G52 all agree against the remaining manuscripts of 17HsG.<sup>26</sup> móðurföður sínum] afa sínum.

Kári hafði jafnan 8 eðr 12 í hverju höggi] og brytjar Kári niður lið víkinga.

ok ræna drauga fē] að vinna drauga og brjóta upp hauga.

Þráinn hafði verit [...] ok mikit fē með sér] ÷.

There are not enough type-two variants within this text-subgroup to allow more precise classification, but when we take into consideration the chronology of the examined manuscripts and the minor variants appearing in their texts of 17HsG it is unlikely that any of them could be an exemplar for the remaining members in this group.

L381 cannot be the common exemplar, even though it is the oldest manuscript in this group, due to the following reading:

af landi svört ský (Rafn, G52, L1767, M27)] ‘af landi hvert ský’ (L381).

The reading ‘hvert’ is clearly an error which would be difficult to correct back to ‘svört’.

Similarly, M27 cannot be the ancestor due to readings such as:

26. The readings are collated against Rafn's edition for the reader's convenience.

rigaðu þér á fætr, ragr ok blauðr] rigaðu þér á fætur ragur og duglaus, sér þú ekki blauður (G52, L381, L1767), ‘rigadu þér á fætr ragur oc duglaus, sér tu ekki duglaus’ (M27).

The repetition of ‘duglaus’ is a clear error which is unlikely to be corrected back to ‘blauður’.

G52 cannot be the exemplar for this group both due to its dating and due to readings such as:

Sá konungur réði fyrir Görðum í Danmörk (Rafn, L1767, L381, M27)] ‘Fyrir Gaurþom í Danmork réði kongr sá’ (G52).

Hröngviður vó Örnúlf upp á spjóti sínu (Rafn, L1767, L381, M27)] ‘síþann vegur Hraungviþr Örnulf upp á spiotino oc kastar daudom niþr’ (G52).

Finally, L1767 cannot be the common exemplar due to its dating and readings such as:

Bræður 2 Kári og Örnúlfur voru landvarnarmenn konungs, (+ og G52, L381, M27) hermann miklir (Rafn, G52, L381, M27)] ‘tveir bræður voru landvarnarmenn kongs þeir hétu Kár og Ørnulfur, þeir voru hermann miklir’ (L1767).

Nú er þess getit, at Hrómundr Greipsson var í fylgð með konungi] Hrómundur var með konungi (G52, L381, M27), ‘þad var Hrómundur Greipsson með kongi’ (L1767).

At the same time L1767 is clearly not a direct descendant of any other manuscript in this group, due to examples such as:

Eptir það gengu þeir, sem eptirlifðu, allir á hendr konungi, ok lyktaðist svâ bardaginn] ‘Eptir þad geingu kongi aller til handa’ (G52), Eftir það gengu allir konungi til handa (L381, M27), ‘eptir þad gengu allir kongi til handa þeir sem eptir lifdu’ (L1767).

This is one of the examples, where L1767 preserves an ‘original’ reading of the text, in this case the phrase ‘þeir sem eptirlifðu’, which is omitted in the remaining manuscripts in text-sub-group A<sub>1</sub>.

The presented evidence suggests that all four texts in text-sub-group A<sub>1</sub> are independent from each other, but derived from a common ancestor, A<sub>1</sub>. The last example on the list above, the omission which appears in G52, L381, M27 but not in L1767, suggests that G52, L381, M27 originate from a common ancestor, A<sub>4</sub>, which introduced this omission (see the stemma in Figure 3.2 on page 101)

Text-group A<sub>2</sub>

The four manuscripts of text-group A<sub>2</sub> are (in supposed chronological order):

- ÍB 43 fol. (I43), written between 1730 and 1770,
- BL Add. 11108 (B11108), written in the eighteenth century,
- Lbs 1217 4to (L1217), written in 1817,
- Lbs 3164 4to (L3164), written in 1879.

27. Páll Eggert Ólason, Skrá, II:725.

quires IV–VIII), Áns saga bogsveigis (ff 39r–48v, quires IX–X), Porsteins þáttur bæjarmagns (ff 49r–54r, quire XI), Eiríks saga víðförla (ff 55r–57v, quire XII), Sturlaug saga starfsama (ff 58r–69v, quires XIII–XIV), 17HsG (ff 70r–74v, quire XV), Hálfs saga og Hálfsrekka (ff 75r–80v, quire XVI), and final in quires XVII–XXII Porsteins saga Vikingssonar (ff 81r–102r) and Friðþjófs saga (ff 102v–114v).

Further evidence that the manuscript's organization has been changed can also be found by examining the traces of the older pagination present on some of the leaves.<sup>28</sup> The pagination does not correspond to the present organization of the manuscript. The reconstructed manuscript would probably have texts in the following order: 1. an unknown text or texts, a lacuna of 69 pages (pp. 1–69), 2. Áns saga bogsveigis, pp. 70–89, 3. Sturlaug saga starfsama, pp. 90–113, 4. Göngu-Hrólfs saga, pp. 114–165, 5. an unknown text or texts, a lacuna of 12 pages (pp. 167–177), 6. Porsteins saga Vikingssonar pp. 178–220, 7. Friðþjófs saga pp. 221–245, 8. an unknown text or texts, a lacuna of 12 pages (pp. 246–257), 9. Porsteins þáttur bæjarmagns pp. 258–269, 10. Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar pp. 270–293. Some of the listed lacunas could be filled in by other texts present in I43 where the pagination is illegible, such as Eiríks saga víðförla, which occupies six pages (but probably used to belong to the quire of eight pages), 17HsG, which occupies 10 pages (but probably used to belong to the quire of 12 pages), and Hálfs saga og Hálfsrekka which occupies 12 pages. It is impossible to determine which other texts would fill in the remaining 65 pages.

According to the catalogue,<sup>29</sup> the manuscript was written circa 1750, but the hand and origin of the manuscript is unknown. Not much is known about the history of I43, or its provenance, other than that the Icelandic Literary Society (Hið íslenzka bókmenntafélag) received it in 1858/9 from Pétur Jónsson from Kálfatjörn (1778–1865). On a blueish slip of paper accompanying I43 there is a list of sagas preserved in the manuscript followed by the note 'Frá Síra Pétri Jónssyni' (From Rev. Pétur Jónsson).

28. It is certain that the numerals written in the top right corners of some of the leaves are pagination, not foliation, because f. 39r has the number 70, f. 39v has 71, and f. 40r has 72. The pagination in Porsteins saga Vikingssonar continues also in Friðþjófs saga.

BL Add. 11108

BL Add. 11108 (B11108), held in the British Library in London, is a composite manuscript which contains v+246+v leaves. The manuscript was bound (or rebound) in 1970, and not much can be said about the original context of the texts the manuscript contains and its quire structure. B11108 today consists of twelve or fourteen parts, depending on how one counts,<sup>30</sup> preserving the following texts: two copies of Hervarar saga og Heiðreks, Bósa saga og Herrauðs, Örvar-Odds saga, 17HsG (ff 105r–112r), two copies of Sörla saga sterka, Jóns saga Upplendingakonungs, Porsteins saga Víkingssonar, Friðþjófs saga, Ketils saga hængs, Sörla þáttur, Hálfs saga og Hálfsrekka, Sigurðar þáttur slefu, Söguþáttur af Sigurði gangandi Bárðarsyni. The texts are preceded by twelve title pages numbered from 14 to 26, two of which introduce two texts: nr. 20: ‘Saga af Sörla enum Sterka’ and ‘Páttr af Jóni Upplendinga-Kóngi’; nr. 26: ‘Páttr af Porkéli Klipp’ and ‘Saga af Sigurði Gángandi, Bárdar syni’.

Most of the texts were written in the eighteenth century, as various dates are attested in diff rent places: 1714 on f. 104 and f. 216v, 1718 on f. 237r and f. 240, 1761 on f. 138r, and 1813 on f. 190v. Around thirteen diff rent main scribal hands can be distinguished, which are not evenly distributed throughout the manuscript. One more hand, certainly a nineteenth-century hand, supplied the title pages (ff 1r, 18r, 138<sup>bis</sup>) for the individual items. The distribution of the scribal hands is as follows: Hand 1 (ff 2r–17v), Hand 2 (ff 19r–68v), Hand 3 (ff 69r–77v), Hand 4 (ff 78r–104v dated to 1714, possibly also ff 209r–216v), Hand 5 (ff 105r–112r, 158r–159r, 191r–208v, and possibly also ff 160r–184r:10), Hand 6 (ff 113r–138r, dated to 1761, signed by Jakob Sigurðsson from Sauðanes),<sup>31</sup> Hand 7 (ff 139r–142v), Hand 8 (ff 143r–157v, signed by Gottskálk Jónsson),<sup>32</sup> Hand 9 (ff 160r–184r:10, possibly the same hand as Hand 5), Hand 10 (ff 184r:11–190v, dated to 1813),<sup>33</sup> Hand 11 (ff 217r–223v), Hand 12 (ff 224r–237v and 239r–240v, dated to 1718), Hand 13 (ff 241–246v). This physical heterogeneity of the manuscript confirm that it was not designed as a single unit, but rather is the result of later interventions aggregating individual parts into a single volume.

30. Jón Helgason, in his ‘Catalogue of the Icelandic Manuscripts in the British Library’, distinguishes thirteen separate parts.

31. According to Jón Helgason’s catalogue, it is probably Jakob Sigurðsson (n.d.), a poet from Vopnafjörður for his biography see Páll Eggert Ólason, Íslenskar æviskrár, III:12.

32. According to Jón Helgason’s catalogue, it is probably Gottskálk Jónsson (d. 1757) from Hvanneyri, for his biography see Páll Eggert Ólason, II:93.

17HsG is written on ff 105r–112r, forming the fourth part of the manuscript, and it is written in hand 5. This hand has not yet been found in any signed manuscript, which would allow us to identify the scribe by name and narrow down the dating of this part.

The manuscript belongs to the collection of Icelandic manuscripts purchased by the British Museum in 1837 from Finnur Magnússon (1781–1847), a professor of literature at the University of Copenhagen.<sup>34</sup> This is confirmed by the note on the recto side of the third front-fly-leaf which reads ‘Purchased of Professor | Finn Magnusen | July 1837’. Frederic Madden (1801–1873), first an Assistant Keeper and later Keeper of Manuscripts at the British Museum, was responsible for the transaction with Finnur Magnússon. He purchased 437 items for a sum of 180 British pounds, which he considered to be a very high price for manuscripts in such poor condition as those in Finnur’s collection. Madden wrote in one of his letters: ‘the greater part [of the collection] are sad trash, and scarcely worth binding. The condition of many of them is absolutely stinking, & I never had a worse job than to examine & arrange them’.<sup>35</sup> Apparently, some items were bound together into single volumes after they arrived in London, and B11108 must be one of them.<sup>36</sup>

33. According to Jón Helgason’s catalogue, it is probably written by Halldór Davíðsson (1792–1865), a poet from Prestbakkaþot, for his biography see Páll Eggert Ólason, II:250.

34. Bricka, Dansk biografisk Lexikon, XI:57–63.

36. The separate parts of the manuscripts were individually numbered and catalogued, see: AM 925 4to, a copy of Finnur Magnússon’s catalogue ‘Catalogus amplæ Manuscriptorum Collectionis, adhuc Hafniæ servatae, jam inde Londinum Museo Britannico mittendæ, auctore Finn Magnuson (sic)’. The collection today is held in the British Library with the shelfmarks Add. 11061–11251.

Lbs 1217 4to

Lbs 1217 4to (L1217), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík,<sup>37</sup> consists of 205 unbound leaves. The fragile state of the manuscript does not allow for the examination of the quire structure. The volume opens with a title page and a table of contents, followed by Konráðs saga keisarasonar, Sturlaug's saga starfsama, Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar, Þorsteins saga hvíta, Bernóttus saga Bornejarkappa, Líkafróns saga og kappa hans, Rígabels saga konungs og Alkanus, Faustus saga og Ermenu í Serklandi, Nikulás saga leikara, Adónías saga, Vilmundar saga viðutan, Sigurgarðs saga frækna, Starkaðar saga gamla, 17HsG (ff 163v–166v), Áns saga bogsveigis, Hálfdanar saga gamla, Hákonar þáttur Hárekssonar, and Placidus saga.

17HsG, preserved on ff 163v–166v, is followed by a colophon which reads ‘Endud ad Störa Vatnshorni j Haukadal [Dag] | 29da May 1817 af J.Jönssyne’, providing us with information about its place and date of writing.

The first bifolio is a later addition; it contains a title page and a table of contents in the hand of Jón Porkelsson (1859–1924), an archivist and doctor of philosophy from the University of Copenhagen.<sup>38</sup> The title page of L1217 provides information on the provenance of the manuscript, identifying the scribe, one of the previous owners, Daði Davíðsson (1859–1955) from Kötlustaðir, and a ‘middleman’, Björn Sigfússon (1849–1932). It reads:

Sögubók | skrifuð á Vatnshorni i Haukaldal 1817 af
Jón(as'i) Jóns-Isyni. | [Kom 4/11 1896 frá Daði Davíðssyni
| á Kötlustöðum i Vatnsdal, fyrir milligaungu Björns alþingismanns Sigfússonlar í Grímstungum.]

(A saga book, written at Vatnshorn in Haukadalur 1817 by Jón (or Jónas) Jónsson. Arrived on 4 November 1896 from Daði Davíðsson from Kötlustaðir in Vatnsdalur, through the member of parliament Björn Sigfússon from Grímstunga.)

Not much is known about Daði Davíðsson and how he came into the possession of L1217. Björn Sigfússon (1849–1932) was a member of the Icelandic parliament in the years 1892–1900 and 1908–

38. Páll Eggert Ólason, Íslenskar æviskrár, III:313–314.

1911. Björn, however, spent most of his life as a farmer, or bóndi, in Vatnsdalur in Northern Iceland, firs at Hof in the years 1882–1886, later at Grímstunga in the years 1886–1889, and final in Kornsá in the years 1899–1925.<sup>39</sup>

The identification of the scribe, named J. Jónsson, is problematic. He could perhaps be identified as Jónas Jónsson (1767–1839), the son of Jón Egilsson from Stóra-Vatnshorn. It has been argued, however, that, regardless of the information provided on the title page, the manuscript had to be copied by Jóhannes Jónsson (1798–1877), known as Jóhannes the blind.<sup>40</sup> This is because, according to the census of 1816, Jónas Jónsson (1767–1839) was a bóndi at Sælingsdalstunga at that time, so he could not have copied the manuscript in Stóra-Vatnshorn. At the same time, his brother Árni Jónsson (1754–1825) was a bóndi at Stóra-Vatnshorn,<sup>41</sup> where Jóhannes Jónsson is listed as a vinnumaður.

This explanation seems convincing, but poses some challenges regarding the scribal hand attribution. The script type of L1217 is remarkably different than the script used by Jóhannes in other manuscripts, among them L1767, making attribution based on palaeographic grounds simply impossible.<sup>42</sup> Additionally, we cannot exclude the possibility that Jónas Jónsson (1767–1839) was temporarily staying at his brother's farm at some point in 1817 and copied the manuscript there. It is necessary to conduct further study of Jóhannes' and Jónas' manuscripts in order to confirm the scribal hand identification.

The texts appear in the following order: Hinriks saga heilráða (p. 1-68, ff 1r-34r, quires I-IX), Ajax saga keisarasonar and Knúts saga Steinssonar heimska (p. 1-36, ff 35r-52r, quires X-XIV), and on p. 1-218 (ff 53r-161v, quires XV-XXVI) the remaining sagas, Knúts saga Steinssonar heimska, Sigurðar saga turnara, Egils saga einhenda og Ásmundar berserkjabana, 17HsG (ff 79v-86r), Ajax saga frækna, Porgríms saga konungs og kappa hans, Rímur af Sigurði og Smáfríði, Þorsteins saga Víkingssonar.

The manuscript was written around the year 1879, as this date appears in the colophon on f. 34r. All the texts are written in one hand. Thanks to the signed colophons, for example, on ff 36v, 60v, and 102r, the hand can be identified as that of Þorvaldur Skúlason Sívertsen (1859–1919), a bookbinder from Hrappsey.<sup>46</sup> L3164 is the only known manuscript in Þorvaldur's hand, and not much is known about his scribal activity.

It is unknown when and how the National Library acquired L3164.

Textual relationships in A<sub>2</sub>

There are several changes that manuscripts of text-group A<sub>2</sub> introduce to the text of 17HsG which allow them to be grouped together, for example:

Rafn] A<sub>2</sub>.

fyrir Görðum í Danmörk] fyrir Danmörk.

The relationships among the members of this text-sub-group are difficult to establish, but there are some clear patterns, which include L3164 being a direct descendant of L1217, and, lacking any evidence to the contrary, I43 being likely the exemplar for the remaining texts of A<sub>2</sub>.

B11108 cannot be an ancestor of this text-sub-group as it contains readings such as:

að mér þótti koma (+ hér L1217) 'af (að L1217, L3164) landi (+ hér L3164) svört sky (Rafn, I43, L1217, L3164)] 'at svørt sky komu af lande' (B11108).

There is a close relationship between L1217 and L3164, as demonstrated by readings such as:

þar bjó einn ríkur bóndi (Rafn, B11108, I43)] þar var einn ríkur bóndi (L1217, L3164).

þau áttu 9 syni, er svá hétu (Rafn, B11108, I43)] þau áttu þann son er Hrómundur hét og aðra sonu er svo hétu (L1217, L3164).

Nú er konúngs systr sóktar (Rafn, B11108, I43)] Pessu næst er Svanhvít sókt (L1217, L3164).

Finally, there are numerous independent innovations introduced in L3164, for example:

að griót og steinar gengu upp (Rafn, B11108, L1217, I43)]
'og gekk upp fyrir þeim grjót' (L3164).

‘rétt (÷ B11108) fyrir framstafni, þeir ‘sigldu (komu Rafn) vestan að Valladni, (+ ok Rafn) fundu hauginn (Rafn, I43, L1217, B11108)] ÷ L3164.

This omission of an entire sentence in the latter example is a clear eye-skip, from one occurrence of ‘hauginn’ to another. It most likely originates directly from L1217 where they appear in close proximity to each other, one above the other in the middle of two adjacent lines (lines 26 and 27 on f. 167r).

Another example suggesting that L3164 is based directly on L1217 is the reading:

‘ok siertu ekke blaudur’ (L1217)] ‘og sittu ekki blauður’ (L3164).

In L1217, the abbreviation of ‘er’ in siertu is written in-line and can easily be mistaken for the letter ‘t’. This is probably how and why sért þú became sittu.

No evidence has been found to conclude that L1217 is independent of I43. Therefore, it is most likely its descendant. I43 preserves the most conservative readings in this group and does not introduce any significa t variants, therefore, lacking any evidence to the contrary, I43 is the most likely exemplar for the remaining manuscripts in text-sub-group A<sub>2</sub>.

Manuscript context

Texts of seventy-four works appear together with 17HsG in the manuscripts classified as members of text-sub-groups A<sub>1</sub> and A<sub>2</sub>. Fourteen of them co-occur with 17HsG more than once, but only five of them more than three times: Porsteins saga Vikingssonar, Friðþjófs saga, Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar, Hálf's saga og Hálfssrekka, Starkaðar saga gamla.

It is important to notice that one saga distinguishes itself remarkably in the number of co-occurrences with 17HsG in these text-sub-groups: Porsteins saga Vikingssonar. It appears together with 17HsG in 63% of the manuscripts (five out of eight: L1767, L381, B11108, I43, L3164). Porsteins saga Vikingssonar appeared together with 17HsG in the second volume of Rafn’s edition of the legendary sagas, and its text was printed immediately after 17HsG.

It is, however, unlikely that Rafn's edition had direct influence on the organization of the texts in these manuscripts.<sup>47</sup> First, three of them pre-date the publication of the edition, and second, none of these manuscripts preserves these two sagas in the same order as they appear in the edition.

The co-occurrence of these two sagas may not be coincidental. There are numerous parallels between Þorsteins saga Þíkings-sonar and 17HsG, including but not limited to the great battle on the frozen lake Vänern and the importance of prophetic dreams. Starkaðar saga gamla and Friðþjófs saga, which also frequently co-occur with 17HsG in these manuscripts, give accounts of events related to Þorsteinn's descendants. They probably appear in these manuscripts because of their relationship to Þorsteins saga Þíkings-sonar rather than to 17HsG.<sup>48</sup>

Finally, two other sagas frequently co-occurring with 17HsG in these manuscripts, Hálfssaga og Hálfssrekka and Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar, contain direct mentions of Hrómundur. Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar mentions him in its first chapter, when King Þrándur is introduced together with his wife Dagmær, who was a sister of Hrómundur's wife Svanhvít. Hálfssaga og Hálfssrekka mentions Hrómundur's mother Gunnlöð as a daughter of Hrólfur the black. Taking both these references into account the co-occurrence of these sagas within these text-sub-groups seems to be closely related to the genealogical relations between the characters mentioned in them. A further study of single manuscripts in these text-sub-groups should be a priority for future research. It might reveal further patterns of relationships and help us better understand these sagas in the contexts in which they appear.

47. It is clear from textual analysis that these manuscripts are not related to Rafn's edition.

48. A recent study on Starkaðar saga gamla has been published by Bampi, 'Starkaður across the Centuries: Strategies of Rewriting and Manuscript Variation in Starkaðar saga gamla'. For a discussion of the role of fornaldarsögur, including Þorsteins saga Þíkingssonar and Friðþjófs saga, in the historical writing of the late seventeenth century, see: O'Connor, 'Putrid Fables and True Histories: Perceptions of Authenticity and the Management of Scepticism in Northern Humanist fornaldarsaga Scholarship'.

3.2 Text-group B

The younger manuscripts of text-group B can be further categorised into five text-sub-groups, B<sub>1–5</sub>. As illustrated in Figure 3.3, they are closely related to the texts preserved in the manuscripts written by Jón Þórðarson. Some of them preserve texts of 17HsG which are direct descendants of Jón Þórðarson's texts, while others share a common ancestor (B) with them. All texts in this group reproduce the peculiar readings present in the oldest manuscripts in text-group B (discussed in Section 2.4), such as:

B<sub>1–5</sub>] A, C. frá söguna] fregn þessa.
á veg komnir] á leið komnir.
kú] ský.
Svílöð] Gunnlöð.<sup>49</sup>

From a textual perspective, most of the manuscripts in text-group B are fairly conservative. With the exception of the manuscripts in text-sub-group B<sub>1</sub>, the manuscripts in this group reproduce the readings introduced in the oldest manuscripts with only minor changes. B<sub>1</sub>, however, introduces extensive innovations into the text of 17HsG, which has led me to edit it separately as 18HsG. From the perspective of the history of transmission of 17HsG and the geographical distribution of the manuscripts, some of the manuscripts in text-group B, especially B<sub>3</sub>, provide valuable insights into the production and dissemination of early-modern manuscripts in Iceland. They allow us to trace their ownership history in the scribal networks of western Iceland.

49. Exceptions are manuscripts JS 634 4to (J634) and Lbs 840 4to (L840), which preserve texts categorised as B-group even though they share the reading 'Gunnlöð' with group A instead of 'Svíjlöð'. The name 'Gunnlöð', which appears in the description of the figure with Þráinn, can easily be a correction introduced by an attentive scribe of the common ancestor of L840 and J634 (B<sub>1</sub>), as at the beginning of the story Hrómundur's mother is introduced as 'Gunnlöð' in L840 (f. 256v:8 and f. 254r:13) and J634 (f. 89r:10 and f. 92r:9). These two manuscripts, however, join text-group B in other major readings.

Text-group B<sub>1</sub>

Text-group B<sub>1</sub> is particularly interesting from the textual point of view, as the manuscripts in this group introduce extensive innovations into the text of 17HsG. Text-group B<sub>1</sub> contains two manuscripts:

- Lbs 840 4to (L840), written in 1737.
- JS 634 4to (J634), in which 17HsG was written in 1767.

The texts of these two manuscripts often parallel with each other but diverge significantly from the remaining manuscripts within text-group B, creating a separate version to which I refer as 18HsG. The texts in both L840 and J634 are divided into eight chapters, whereas other manuscripts in text-group B consist of five or six chapters. Moreover, numerous passages in the saga are paraphrased in B<sub>1</sub>, resulting in the text of 18HsG being much more verbose than the rest of the 17HsG tradition.

Almost half a century passed between the writing of 17HsG in A601 and the copying of 18HsG. On one hand, 18HsG could be seen as the result of long transmission of the text and the gradual accumulation of variants. On the other hand, it might be viewed as an intentional intervention into the saga's style. It is impossible to know how many manuscripts preserving 17HsG have been lost in the meantime, and hence it is equally impossible to determine with any certainty which scenario is more likely. The only certainty is that the changes must have been introduced already in the common ancestor of L840 and J634 (B<sub>1</sub>).

The change in style of 18HsG, when compared to 17HsG, can be observed at the sentence level, as demonstrated by the following examples:

Rafn] B<sub>1</sub>.

Sa konúngr rēð fyrir Görðum í Danmörk] Það er upphaf þessarar sögu (sögu þessarar L840) að konungur sá réð fyrir Görðum.

Eptir fall þeirra bræðra kallað Hraungviðr, at þeir skuli uppgefast] enn er þeir bræður voru fallnir kallað Hrau[...] til filgda manna þeirra at þeir skuli gefast upp i sitt valld.

ok kvað meiri fremd, at brjóta hauga ok ræna drauga fē] og kvað litla fremd að ræna kotkarla, væri það miklu meiri frami, segir hann, að brjóta hauga, og afl sér þaðan fjá.

In general, the changes introduced into the text of 18HsG can be seen as stylistic improvements. Considering exclusively the above examples, some readers might say that the text becomes more verbose and by that its flow is improved, while others might argue that such stylistic amplifications are superficia and superfluou . There are, however, multiple instances where the text of 18HsG contains more explanatory phrases which introduce more logic to the narration, giving it a clear cause-effic structure.

This becomes quite noticeable when we compare the description of the fight between Helgi and Hrómundur in the following passage, where the modified phrases are underlined in both texts:

Helgi reiddi svā hátt sverð sitt upp yfi sik, at þat tók sundr fötlegg álfatarinnar, ok rendi sverðit ofan i (völlinn) upp at hjöltum, ok mælti: nú er mín heill farin, ok illa tókst til, er ek mista þín. Hrómundr mælti: þú vannst, Helgi! hit mesta slis, er þú drapst sjálfr frillu þína, ok farin mân þín heill; datt Lara dauð niðr. En af því höggi, er Helgi hjó til Hrómundar, svā sverðit ljóp at hjöltum ofan, snart oddr sverðsins kvið Hrómundar, ok risti niðr, en Helgi laut eptir höggini; var þá Hrómundr eigi seinn, ok höggr Mistilteini í höfuð Helga (Rafn, pp. 374–5).

Reidde Helge þá svo hätt sverð sitt upp ijfír sig, at þad tök sundur fötlegg Alftarenar og Rende sverdid ofan ij Jsenñ upp at hiólltum þar er hann miste Hromund, þar er hann brä sier undan þá mælte Helge, nu er farenn mijn heill og Jlla tökst til er eg mista þijn, datt Kära þá daud nidur, Hromundur mælte Nu vanstu Helge hid vesta slis, er þu drapst siäfur fridlu þijna og farenn mun þijn heill, enn af þessu sama högge er Helge hiö til Hrómundar snart oddurenn sverdsins kvid Hrómundar og Riste nidur enn Helge laut effti hóggenu er sverdid fessist ij Jsnum sem fir var sagt, vard Hromundur ei hand seirn, og hoggur Mistilteine i hófuð Helga (L840, f. 258r).

In the case of 17HsG, we learn that Helgi's blow missed Hrómundur only through the direct speech of Helgi: 'nú er mínn heill farin, ok illa tókst til, er ek mista þín'. In 18HsG, an additional sentence appears before Helgi speaks the same words: 'þar er hann miste Hromund, þar er hann brä sier undan þá mælte Helge, nu er farenn mijn heill og Jlla tökst til er eg mista þijn'. The additional sentence provides context to the direct speech. The reader of 18HsG does not need to assume that Hrómundur avoided Helgi's blow, it is stated explicitly, giving a better flow to the narration.

The logical order of events is also clarified in the sentences following Helgi's direct speech. In 17HsG Hrómundur first says that it is unfortunate that Helgi killed Kára accidentally, and then Kára dies: 'þú vannst, Helgi! hit mesta slis, er þú drapst sjálfir frillu þína, ok farin mán þín heill; datt Lara dauð niðr'. The text of 18HsG first reports Kára's death and then Hrómundur comments on the events: 'datt Kára þá daud nidur, Hromundur mælte Nu vanstu Helge hid vesta slis, er þu drapst síalfur fridlu þijna og farenn mun þijn heill'.

Finally, 18HsG provides an additional explanatory phrase that clarifies why Hrómundur had the opportunity to strike Helgi and kill him. In 17HsG we read only: 'en Helgi laut eptir högginnu; var þá Hrómundr eigi seinn, ok höggr Mistilteini í höfuð Helga', which does not give much context. We do not know whether Helgi bends down because his strike is so powerful that he follows his sword, dragged down by its force, or for some other reason. If the first explanation is correct, then it is strange that Helgi first has time to comment on his luck and then bends down. This is probably why 18HsG introduces an additional explanation: 'enn Helge laut efti hóggenu er sverdid fessist í Jsum sem fir var sagt, vard Hromundur ei hand seirn, og hoggur Mistilteine i hófud Helga'. The text explains that Helgi bends down to take his sword out of the ice, giving Hrómundur the possibility to strike him.

There are numerous examples of such explanatory phrases throughout the text of 18HsG which make the narrative easier to follow. This is especially clear at the beginning of chapter eight of Rafn's edition (corresponding to chapter four in our edition of 17HsG) with chapter six of 18HsG:

Nú eru konúngs systr sóktar, kannar Svanhvít sár Hrómundar, ok saumar kviðinn saman, ok leitar honum hæginda. Hún lét færa hann karli þeim til græðslu, er Hagall hèt; kerlíng hans var klók; þau tóku vel við honum, ok græddu hann at heilu. Þat fann Hrómundr, at þessi hjón voru margkunnug (Rafn,
 p. 376).

Sva er sagt at þegar Svanhvít Kong sistir frettir Hromund miðg sáran, vera fer hun ä h(a)ns fund og saumar saman kvíðenn med silke þræde og smir síjdan, leitande honum allra þ(ei)ra hægenda er hun kan, liet sydan færa hann karle þeim til græðslu er Hagall het, kierljing hans var klök nockut, þau tóku vel vid honum og græddu hann at heilo, ä laun, þad fann Hrómundur at þau voru klök nockut og marg kunnig (L840, f. 258v).

Here the laconic statement of 17HsG that the king's sisters were summoned ('Nú eru konúngs systr sóktar') is replaced in 18HsG with a more verbose introduction, which explains why Svanhvít comes to heal Hrómundur: 'Sva er sagt at þegar Svanhvít Kong sisstir frettir Hromundur miðg sáran, vera fer hun ä h(a)ns fund'. So, in 18HsG, Svanhvít learns that Hrómundur is badly wounded and this is why she comes to help him.

Neither version explains, however, how Svanhvít found out about Hrómundur's wounds, as all of Hrómundur's brothers are already dead at this point and no one else, besides Svanhvít herself, knew that Hrómundur decided to help Ólafur upon her personal request. An explanation, which would be desirable for a modern reader, is apparently not that important for the story development from the perspective of the seventeenth- and eighteenth-century audiences of 17HsG and 18HsG. What is important, is simply the fact that Svanhvít comes and sews Hrómundur's wounds. In 18HsG, however, an additional piece of information is provided, specifying that the thread she used was made of silk. A rather peculiar addition, but at the same time the use of silk to sew abdominal wounds appears in line with the contemporary medical practice.<sup>50</sup>

Because of this extensive level of modification, 18HsG opens up possibilities for a closer comparative analysis with 17HsG and 19HsG. A detailed comparative analysis has the potential to reveal some interesting stylistic patterns which could be interpreted as manifestations of the eighteenth-century reception of the story of Hrómundur, or expressions of the changing saga style. Such explorations, however, remain beyond the scope of the present study. Instead, in the following sections, we turn to the two manuscripts of 18HsG and the textual relationship between them.

Lbs 840 4to

Lbs 840 4to (L840), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in quarto which consists of i+334-i leaves of watermarked paper.<sup>51</sup> The leaves are gathered into 54 irregular quires, and the structure appears to be as follows: I<sub>10</sub> (1 and 2 added singletons), II<sup>8</sup>, III<sup>8</sup> (6 and 7 blank additions), IV<sup>8</sup>, V<sup>8</sup> (6 blank addition), VI<sup>8</sup>, VII<sup>6</sup>, VIII<sup>8</sup>, IX<sup>8</sup> (wants 8), X<sup>8</sup>, XI<sup>6</sup> (wants 6), XII<sup>6</sup>, XIII<sup>8</sup>–XIV<sup>8</sup>, XV<sup>6</sup>, XVI<sup>8</sup>, XVII<sup>8</sup>–XVIII<sup>8</sup>, XIX<sup>4</sup>, XX<sup>8</sup>, XXI<sup>4</sup>–XXIV<sup>4</sup>, XXV<sup>8</sup>, XXVI<sup>10</sup> (9 and 10 blank additions), XXVII<sup>8</sup>–XXIX<sup>8</sup>, XXX<sup>4</sup>, XXXI<sup>8</sup> (5–8 blank additions), XXXII<sup>4</sup>–XXXIX<sup>4</sup>, XL<sup>4</sup> (1 blank addition), XLI<sup>4</sup>, XLII<sup>6</sup> (1 blank addition), XLIII<sup>6</sup>–XLIV<sup>6</sup>, XLV<sup>4</sup>–XLVI<sup>4</sup>, XLVII<sup>6</sup>, XLVIII<sup>4</sup> (singletons), XLIX<sup>6</sup> (6 blank addition), L<sup>6</sup>, LI<sup>8</sup>–LIII<sup>8</sup>, LIV<sup>4</sup> (singletons).

The codex opens with two title pages followed by Fóstbraæðra saga, Harðar saga, Heiðarvíga saga, Bjarnar saga Hítdælakappa, ‘Explicatio yfer Hallmundar vísur’, Ölkofra þáttur, Bergbúa þáttur, Rémundar saga keisarasonar, Helenu saga, Jarlmanns saga og Hermanns, Viktors saga og Blávus, Ectors saga, Eiríks saga viðförla, 17HsG (ff 254r–260r), Bragða-Ölvís saga, Sigurðar saga fóts, Hákonar þáttur Hárekssonar, Sörla þáttur, Úlf's saga Uggasonar, Guimars saga, Jóns saga leikara, Partalópa saga, Ála flekks saga, Hálfdanar saga Brönufóstra, and a table of contents. Many of the texts preserved in the manuscript, including 17HsG are defective and blank pages were supplied at some later point, probably with the intention to fill in the lacunas.

51. Páll Eggert Ólason, Skrá, I:369.

52. The first two leaves of the manuscript contain title pages which present the same information but have a slightly different arrangement of the text.

(An informative treasure trove of sagas containing many ex-cellent stories, which describe the fame and achievements of Icelandic champions, as well as foreign kings, dukes, and earls [...] according to the oldest and most accurate books available, collected and written down for the entertainment of those who wish to read and hear. Written at Skarð in Skarðsströnd AD 1736.)

In 1737, a well-known manuscript commissioner, Bjarni Pétursson (1681–1768), a sýslumaður (county administrative), was living on Skarð. He resided there between 1705 and 1748 and then again from 1756 until his death. He was married to Elín Þorsteinsdóttir from Skarð and he ‘skrifaði upp og lét skrifa upp allmargt handrita, einkum sögur’ (copied and commissioned many manuscripts, especially sagas).<sup>53</sup> Therefore, it is highly probable that L840 is associated with his activity as a manuscript commissioner.

While previous scholarship excluded the possibility that L840 is in the hand of Bjarni Pétursson, it is still possible that it was commissioned by him.<sup>54</sup> Many manuscripts commissioned by Bjarni contain elaborate title pages, frequently highly decorated, which describe the contents of the manuscript and usually mention the commissioner. For example, there is an impressive and rich title page of Lbs 423 fol., as well as more modest title pages of JS 8 fol. and Lbs 2319 4to,<sup>55</sup> which somewhat resemble the ones in L840. Furthermore, the hand in which 17HsG is written in L840 appears similar to the hand found in Lbs 2319 4to, but this requires 53. Páll Eggert Ólason, Íslenzkar æviskrár, I:188.

54. Hast, Pappershandskrifterna till Harðar saga, 145–147.

55. Recently, Hufnagel focused on the analysis of Lbs 2319 4to, see Hufnagel, ‘Texts and Contexts: Bjarni Pétursson and His Saga Manuscript Lbs 2319 4to (1727–1729)’.

further palaeographic analysis to confirm whether or not these two hands are indeed the same.<sup>56</sup>

The text of 17HsG in L840 is defective. There is a lacuna which equals to ca. 682 words of Rafn's edition. The last clause on f. 258v reads 'Eirn maður var med Hadldinge' (Rafn 376:20-21) and the first clause on f. 260r reads 'nætur strijda, Hrömundur segir til sijn' (Rafn 379:18-19). An additional leaf (f. 259) has been supplied at some later point in order to fill in the lacuna, but it remains blank.<sup>57</sup>

The last leaves (ff. 331-334) of the manuscript are written in a different hand, which seems to be younger than the majority of the manuscript.<sup>58</sup> On the verso side of the last leaf there is a table of contents, which lists twenty three instead of twenty four items. The omitted item is Bragða-Ölvis saga, which immediately follows 17HsG. The omission must be a matter of error rather than a different structure of the manuscript at the time when the table of contents was supplied, because Bragða-Ölvis saga starts on the same leaf where 17HsG ends and it is written in the same hand, so it is unlikely that the text was supplied later.

There are several names that can be found in the margins of L840, which can be associated with descendants of Bjarni Pétursson: 'Magnús' (f. 304r), 'M.Ketilsson' (f. 182v), 'S.Magnússon' (f. 1r), and 'Eggert [Magn...]' (f. 112v). The first two marginal notes can be associated with Magnús Ketilsson (1732-1803), a sýslumaður of Dalasýsla who lived in Búðardalur and was married to Ragnhildur Eggertsdóttir, a granddaughter of Bjarni Pétursson.<sup>59</sup> The third marginal note can be associated with Magnús's son, Skúli Magnússon (1768-1837), who was also a sýslumaður of Dalasýsla after his father's death.<sup>60</sup> The last one refers probably to another son of Magnús, Eggert Magnússon. There is also one unclear marginal note, 56. My observation is based on a sample comparison of L840, f. 260r with Lbs 2319 4to, f. 87r.

57. One leaf would be sufficient to supply the missing text if the scribe could follow the text density of L840; there are 312 words on f. 258v, so the lacuna of ca. 682 words would fill both sides of a single leaf.

58. According to Páll Eggert Ólason, the hand can be dated to ca. 1830, but it is uncertain what his argument for such precise dating is based on, see Páll Eggert Ólason, Skrá, I:369.

60. Páll Eggert Ólason, IV:292.

which reads ‘[J]on Jo[ns]son’ (f. 303r), but it is uncertain to whom it refers.

The notes are an important source of information regarding the manuscript’s ownership history. They allow us to trace the manuscript’s history through three generations of the commissioner’s descendants, to the end of the eighteenth century, or the beginning of the nineteenth century. It is probable that Ragnhildur Eggerts-dóttir inherited L840 from her father Eggert Bjarnason, the son of Bjarni Pétursson.<sup>61</sup> Eggert Bjarnason is known to have spent the last years of his life with his daughter Ragnhildur in Búðardalur, therefore it is not surprising that her husband’s and sons’ names are found in the manuscript.

JS 634 4to

JS 634 4to (J634), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in quarto, consisting of ii+232 leaves mainly of watermarked paper, with some additional paper added to some quires.<sup>62</sup> The leaves are gathered into 39 quires and the structure is as follows: I<sup>8</sup> (wants 8), II<sup>8</sup>–XVI<sup>8</sup>, XVII<sup>10</sup>, XVIII<sup>4</sup>–XXVI<sup>4</sup>, XXVII<sup>6</sup> (wants 1), XXVIII<sup>4</sup>–XXXVII<sup>4</sup>, XXXVIII<sup>6</sup>, XXXIX<sup>8</sup>.<sup>63</sup>

The manuscript begins with a title page and table of contents (on recto and verso sides of the second fly-leaf followed by the sagas: Ketils saga hængs, Gríms saga loðinkinna, Örvar-Odds saga, 17HsG (ff 89r–96v), Hákonar þáttur Hárekssonar, Mírmanns saga, Jarlmanns saga og Hermanns, Ála flekks saga, Vilhjálms saga sjóðs, Hálfssaga og Hálfrekka.

63. Uncertain structure of quires VIII, XVII, XXVII, XXXVIII, and XXXIX, due to later additions glued to the original leaves. Note that the last leaf of the manuscript, made of bluish paper, blank, and unnumbered [f. 232, or pp. 461–462], is not included in the leaf count in the online catalogue Handrit.org, where the count is ii+231. After the manuscript was digitised, it became clear that the last leaf is marked as a rear fly-leaf which revealed the error in the prose description of the manuscript indicating that f. 231 is blank, while in fact, it is f. 232 that is blank. See the Handrit.org description, archived on 9/07/2022 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20220709061521/https://handrit.is/manuscript/view/is/JS04-0634> and on 20/02/2024 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20240220111004/https://handrit.is/manuscript/view/is/JS04-0634>.

The text of 17HsG is preserved on ff 89r–96v (p. 175–190).<sup>64</sup> The saga is divided into eight chapters with the following titles (for convenience in English translation, the original titles can be found in the edition):

1. Descent, birth, growing up and swift victory of Hrómundur,
2. Hrómundur opens Þráin's mound,
3. Hrómundur wins the mound dweller and gets Mistilteinn,
4. Hrómundur gets into the king's disfavour due to defamation,
5. Hrómundur fight against Haddingjar with king Ólafur upon Svanhvít's request,
6. Hrómundur is in care of Hagall and his wife,
7. Blindur's dreams and king Hadding's interpretation,
8. Killing of king Hadding and Blindur and marriage of Hrómundur.

As evident from these descriptive chapter headings, the story remains consistent, but the headings summarise the main events of the saga, emphasising certain events while overlooking others. This approach serves as a significant example of the eighteenth-century reception of the saga and offers an insight into the contemporary interpretation of the story, which arguably appears to differ considerably from how many might read this saga today.

Although the text of the saga has been stylistically altered, the main storyline remains unchanged. However, thanks to the title headings, the story can be interpreted in a distinct manner. It is particularly interesting that none of the titles mention the deaths of Hröngviður and his brother Helgi, which some readers might consider central events of the story. Instead, the emphasis is on Hrómundur's accomplishments and the conflict between Ólafur and the Haddingjar. The narrative shifts away from a tale of personal vengeance, as implied by the various killings—Hröngviður's death as retribution for killing Kári and Örnúlfur, Helgi's death for killing Hrómundur's brothers, and Vóli's death for killing Hrómundur's dog—to one highlighting themes of achieving glory, supporting a king at a princess's behest, prophetic dreams that signal the downfall of adversaries, and ultimately marrying the princess. This perspective offered by the saga in J634 allows for a reading that fore-grounds elements of heroism, loyalty, and fate over those of personal vendetta

Based on the quire structure and the dates given in the colophons following various texts, a division of the manuscript into two parts can be proposed. In the first part (quires I–XVII, ff 1–137), quires of four conjoint leaves dominate, while in the second part (quires XVIII–XXXIX, ff 138–231) quires of two conjoint leaves dominate. In the first part there is a colophon dated to 1767 (f. 95v) and in the second part there are two colophons dated to 1805 and 1806. Moreover, an overlap between quire boundary and text boundary also supports this division: Mírmanns saga ends quire XVII while Jarlmanns saga og Hermanns starts quire XVIII, in which the type and the quality of paper changes.

The first part of the manuscript was written by Markús Snæbjarnarson (1708–1787), a minister on Flatey.<sup>65</sup> The second part of the manuscript was probably written by Tómas Sigurðsson (1772–1849), also from Flatey.<sup>66</sup> Tómas was living there around the time the second part of J634 was copied and his name is attested on f. 89r of J634, by the beginning of 17HsG.<sup>67</sup>

Geography and family relations seem to play an important role in the copying process of this manuscript.<sup>68</sup> As visualised in Figure 3.4, Markús Snæbjarnarson was the son of Kristín Magnúsdóttir, the daughter of Magnús Jónsson from Vigur (1637–1702). It was Magnús, for whom Jón Þórðarson worked as a scribe, and for whom he copied B4859 and possibly also Lbs 222 fol. There are some textual indications (discussed in greater detail in the following section) that allow us to assume that there was at least one more manuscript of 17HsG which served as an exemplar for the common ancestor of L840 and J634. This manuscript might also been associated with Magnús Jónsson's family. As mentioned in Section 1.2, 65. For Markús Snæbjarnarson's biography, see Páll Eggert Ólason, Íslenskar æviskráir, III:474–475. Other manuscripts in Markús Snæbjarnarson's hand are Lbs 204 fol., Lbs 356 fol., and a part of ÍB 376 4to.

66. Páll Eggert Ólason, V:16.

67. Slay, Mírmanns saga, xxx. Other manuscripts where Tómas' hand can be found include parts of Lbs 1540 8vo, ÍB 757 8vo, ÍB 764 8vo, but I did not have access to these manuscripts or their facsimiles to compare the hand, see Páll Eggert Ólason, Skrá, II:303, III:166–168.

68. A similar case is described in Section 3.2.

we know that there was at least one more manuscript in Magnús Jónsson's possession which preserved a text of 'Hrómundar saga'. The 'second book of Magnús Jónsson in 4to' (*MJ 2 4to), as listed in AM 211 b 4to, might be one of the missing links between L840 and J634 and the remaining manuscripts in text-group B.

There are two flyle ves at the beginning of the manuscript. On the recto side of the second flylea there is a title 'Sögu Safn', and on the verso side there is a table of contents listing ten items, both written by Páll Pálsson (1806–1877), a bookbinder at the National Library ca. 1850–1870.<sup>69</sup> The manuscript has been extensively repaired, and Páll Pálsson added the text that was missing due to damage by writing it on the added support.

The manuscript is the twelfth volume in a collection of nineteen manuscripts, catalogued under the shelfmarks from JS 623 4to to JS 641 4to. These manuscripts were previously owned by Jón Sigurðsson (1811–1879), a scholar, politician, and very active book collector.<sup>70</sup> This is only a small part of Jón Sigurðsson's manuscript library, which consisted of ca. 2000 volumes.<sup>71</sup> The collection of his manuscripts was bought by the Icelandic parliament in 1878 and, after his death, was given to the National Library.

Textual relationships in B<sub>1</sub>

As previously indicated, L840 and J634 are most likely descendants of a common exemplar, since neither one can be a copy of the other. The text in L840 could not have been copied from J634 simply due to chronology; J634 was copied in 1767 and L840 around 1737. J634 could not be a copy of L840 based on textual criteria. There are examples where J634 preserves readings which are more closely related to the remaining manuscripts in group B than to L840, for example:

líktist (+ hann J634) mjög Hróki móðurföður sínum] 'lijktest mióg mödur fôdur sijnum Hroke hinum svarta', liði sínu vestur til Suðureyja] ‘lide synu til Sudureia vestur’, Hrómundur bað hann segja sér] ‘Hromundur bad hann vijsa Sier’.

The common ancestor of the text-sub-group B<sub>1</sub> must be a descendant of a common ancestor of the oldest manuscripts in text-group B (A345, B4859 and L222), because B<sub>1</sub> is certainly not derived directly from L222 or B4859 since it does not reproduce their shared innovations, such as:

L222, B4859] A345, L840, J634.

konungur (+ varð mjög reiður og L222) mælti fyrir þessi þín orð] ÷,

skal Hrómundur ‘gálgann gista (hengður verða B4859) þótt hann sé frækinn (+ kallaður L222)] ÷.

At the same time, B<sub>1</sub> is not derived from A345, because it does not reproduce its individual readings, such as: norður fyrir Noreg] austur fyrir Noreg, rétt fyrir stafni fram] rétt fyrir framstafni, brendi hann allan] brendi hann upp allan.

A345] B4859, L222, J634, L840.

Text-sub-group B<sub>2</sub>

Text-sub-group B<sub>2</sub> is has been distinguished to describe an interesting case study of two manuscripts, B4875 and L222, which are textually closely related to each other, and which also most likely share a part of their history of ownership. This pair has been selected for closer discussion not only because it is a good example of a branch of the stemma that has ‘died out’ due to the acquisition of the manuscript by a foreign collector, but also because it shows a hypothetical example of how manuscripts might have circulated in Icelandic families for several generations in the post-medieval period. As a result of this decision, B<sub>2</sub> is represented by only one younger manuscript of 17HsG:

- BL Add. 4875 (B4875), 17HsG written in 1763.

B4875 is textually closely related to L222. In fact, it appears to be its descendant, as it reproduces the innovations of L222 which are absent from all other texts of 17HsG, such as:

Rafn] L222, B<sub>2</sub>.

at landi sínu um kyrt] að landi sínu um hríð.

at Hrómundr muni hafa verit þat] að kelling muni hafa verið það.

Um vetrinn eptir] Um morguninn eftir.

The readings of B4875 diverge from L222 mainly in orthography but some minor variant readings, such as, word order, synonyms, obvious scribal errors and minor additions or omissions, as demonstrated below:

L222] B4859.

‘hielltt olafr kongr austr fyrir noreg] ‘hiellt Olafr Kongr austur Med Lande austur fyrir norueg’.

‘kall sagþi at hann mä sigla’] ‘kall sagde ad sigla maa’.

‘kongr vard miðk reiþr oc mællti *fyrir þessi þijn ord skal Hromundr Gælgann Gysta þott hann sie frækinn kallaþr*’]

‘Konungr mællti fi ir þessi þijn ord skal Hromundur galgann gista þott hann frækni sie kalladur’.

The most striking evidence for B4875 being derived from L222 is the presence of the addition ‘skal Hrómundur gálgann gista þótt hann ‘sé frækni (frækni sé B4875) kallaður’. This addition appears close to the end of chapter three of the saga as presented in the present edition (and chapter fi e of Rafn’s edition). It appears in the conversation between Svanhvít and her brother, King Ólafur, during which Ólafur expresses his disapproval of the warm relationships between Svanhvít and Hrómundur. While in A601 and in the majority of other manuscripts, it is Svanhvít who states that the evil brothers Blindur and Vóli shall be hanged, in L222 and B4875 it is Ólafúr who’d rather see Hrómundur hanging and expresses it by using the phrase ‘gálgann gista’.<sup>72</sup>

BL Add. 4875

BL Add. 4875 (B4875), held in the British Library in London, consists of ii+88+ii leaves in quarto. It is a composite manuscript in a modern library binding, preserving various handwritten texts, along with printed newspaper materials.

The manuscript can be divided into six parts. The first part includes Valdimars saga, Sigurðar saga fóts, 17HsG (ff 16r–21v), Bragða-Ölvís saga, Ævintýri af Valltara hertoga, and Sturlaug saga starfsama. The second part contains newspaper extracts from Die Dänische Fama. The third part contains one ævintýri beginning with the words ‘Herraudur hefur kongur heited’. The fourth and fifth parts preserve two copies of Þorsteins saga Vikingssonar. The final part consists of some newspaper extracts from Post=Rytter.

17HsG concludes with a colophon indicating that the copying of the text was completed on 23 August 1763. Following the text is a short poem on the subject matter of 17HsG. The poem contains the poet’s name, Eggert, and concludes with a formulaic phrase thanking readers and listeners for their attention, ‘Saa haf þock sem | les | Enn saa alls aunga | sem | skrifade | FINIS Est ’ (Thanks to those who read, but none to those who wrote. The End.), followed by the initials 'E.H.S.'

At least four different hands can be distinguished in the manuscript, and according to Jón Helgason's catalogue, Eggert Hákonarson (1746/8–1787), the son of Hákon Snaebjarnarson, wrote the portion of the manuscript containing 17HsG.<sup>73</sup>

Shortly after the youngest part of the manuscript was copied, i.e., the part containing 17HsG,<sup>74</sup> the manuscript joined the collection of the British Museum. Today, B4875 is held in the British Library but it originally belonged to the collection of forty volumes acquired by the British Museum during 1773–1779 from Sir Joseph Banks (today BL Add. 4857–4896). As previously mentioned in Section 2.3, some manuscripts in Banks's collection were likely acquired during his visit to Iceland in 1772, while others were sent to him later by Ólafur Stephensen.<sup>75</sup> The exact arrival date of B4875 at the British Museum is unknown.<sup>76</sup>

B4875 and its exemplar in Jón Þórðarson's hand?

As previously mentioned, B4875 is a composite volume, consisting of six different parts. One of the parts includes printed mater-

74. The latest date attested in the manuscript is 1768 on f. 54r, where a number of scribbles can be found, and among them the name of 'Nathaniel Porsteinsson[0] | [á] Sondum d. [10] Augustu (sic!) 1768'. This is probably Nathanael Porsteinsson (d. 1794) who married Svanborg Hákonardóttir, a sister of Margrét Hákonardóttir (see sections on Suðureyrarhreppur in the unpublished manuscript, Kjartan Ólafsson, 'Firðir og fólk 900–1900: Vestur-Ísafjarðarsýla: Vinnuhandrit'. Note that no information about these people can be found in the published version of his work, Kjartan Ólafsson, Firðir og fólk 900–1900: Vestur-Ísafjarðarsýsla. Gengið bæ frá bæ í Arnarfirði, Dýrafirði, Önundarfirði og Súgandafirði, litið á landslag og hugað að mannlífi og minjum eitt þúsund ára). The relationship between Svanborg and Margrét Hákonardætur and Eggert Hákonarson is unknown and the patronymic name might be a coincidence.

75. Porter, 'Preserving the Past: England, Iceland and the Movement of Manuscripts', 175; Halldór Hermannsson, Sir Joseph Banks and Iceland, 15–17.

76. According to Anna Agnarsdóttir, there is a catalogue of the Icelandic books from Banks in BL Add. 45712, but I did not have a chance to consult it, so it remains unknown to me whether or not it contains some additional information about the manuscript's provenance, see Anna Agnarsdóttir, Sir Joseph Banks, Iceland and the North Atlantic 1772–1820: Journals, Letters and Documents.

ial (ff 44r–53v and 80r–88v), while the majority of the volume is handwritten. The majority of the texts in B4875, ff 1r–43v and 54v–55v, were written in one hand, Hand 1, and are accompanied by dated colophons. The dates indicate that the manuscript was copied over the summer, which seems an unusual practice as many Icelandic manuscripts are often copied over the winter.<sup>77</sup> Hand 1 of B4875 gives the impression that the scribe was inexperienced and perhaps the copying of this manuscript was part of his training in writing. The lines of texts, as well as the letter forms, are irregular and clumsily constructed, and the script is not consistent throughout the texts. On f. 29r, we can observe that the scribe hurries to finish the saga as the script changes remarkably by the end of the text. This speaks in favour of the proposed identification of Eggert Hákonarson as the scribe of the main part of this manuscript because at the time some of the texts in B4875 were copied in 1763, he was only a teenager (fifteen or seventeen years old).

The last hand-copied text in this manuscript, Þorsteins saga Þingssonar, is defective.<sup>78</sup> It is written in two different hands: ff 56r–57v are written in Hand 3, and ff 58r–79v are written in Hand 2. According to Jón Helgason's catalogue, this saga establishes the oldest part of the manuscript, written ca. 1700.<sup>79</sup> Hand 2 has been identified as the hand of sýslumaður Erlendur Ólafsson (d. 1772). Hand 3, on the other hand, closely resembles the hand of Jón Pórðarson, the main scribe of L222. Perhaps this copy of Þorsteins saga Þingssonar was intended to serve as an exemplar for young Eggert Hákonarson, who presumably never managed to copy it, and the text ended up in the same volume as his copies. This would suggest that Eggert Hákonarson had access to Jón Pórðarson's manuscripts, which could have served as exemplars for other texts in his manuscripts. It cannot be excluded that Eggert might have had direct access to L222. It is noteworthy that 17HsG, Bragða-Ölvís saga, and Griseldis saga appear in B4875 in the same order as in L222. While no study of the transmission history of these two sagas yet exists, we can only speculate whether the texts of Bragða-Ölvis saga and Griseldis saga in B4875 were also derived from L222. Until then, however, another explanation could be that ff 56–79 of B4875 were simply supplied later and are not related to the original process of copying other texts. The following section, however, outlines the hypothetical ownership history of L222, which would make the scenario in which Eggert Hákonarson had access to Jón Þórðarson’s manuscripts possible.

Family relationships and manuscript transmission

As mentioned in Section 2.3, L222 might have been one of the manuscripts commissioned by Magnús Jónsson (1637–1702) from Vigur. According to the colophons in L222, the manuscript was copied mainly in the years 1695–1698. It previously belonged to Brynjólfur Oddsson (1825–1887), a bookbinder, as his name appears on the title page. The whereabouts of L222 at the time when B4875 was copied are uncertain.

As Arthur observed, a number of names found in L222 can be associated with Eyri in Önundarfjörðu in the early nineteenth century.<sup>80</sup> Among them is Kjartan Ólafsson (1792–1863) and his mother Þuríður Gísladóttir (1759–1834),<sup>81</sup> both residing at Eyri in Önundarfjörður.<sup>82</sup> The history of L222 before it came into the possession of Þuríður Gísladóttir is not well documented. Some clues might perhaps be deduced from the history of B4875.

As previously mentioned, Eggert Hákonarson, the son of Hákon Snæbjarnarson, was the main scribe of B4875. The names of Eggert and Páll Hákonarson are found in B4875 and they must

81. The dates of births and deaths of Kjartan and Þuríður were found in the online genealogical service www.geni.com and are therefore uncertain. According to the census of 1816, Kjartan was 23 and Þuríður was 55 (mannatal.is, last accessed 22/03/2024).

82. Þuríður, however, on f. 99v signs: ‘Þuríður Gísladóttir a Tröð’, which suggests that at some point she was living with her son Kjartan at Tröð; in the census of 1835, Kjartan is registered as húsbóndi and hreppstjóri at Tröð, where Þuríður’s sister, Guðrún Gísladóttir (aged 73), still lived at that time. If the dates given at www.geni.com can be trusted, then the absence of Þuríður Gísladóttir in the census of 1835 can be easily explained by her death in 1834.

refer to two sons of Hákon Snæbjarnarson (1711–1798), the minister of Áltamýri in the years 1746–1798.<sup>83</sup> Hákon Snæbjarnarson was the son of Kristín Magnúsdóttir, the daughter of Magnús Jónsson from Vigur, the commissioner of L222. If B4875 is indeed a direct copy of L222 then the genealogical relations between the people involved in the production of these two manuscripts allow us to assume that Hákon received L222 from his mother and gave it to his son Eggert, who copied 17HsG from it in 1763.

Eggert Hákonarson was born in 1746 at Eyri in Skutulsfjörðu where his father Hákon was a minister at the time. He studied at Skálholtsskóli, which he left in 1772.<sup>84</sup> He married his cousin, Kristín Markúsdóttir (1737–1816), in 1775 and settled on Flatey where his father-in-law (who was also his father's brother) Markús Snæbjarnarson (1708–1787), was a minister.<sup>85</sup> There is another copy of 17HsG associated with this family, as Markús Snæbjarnarson is a scribe of the first part of J634, also belonging to text-group B. The whereabouts of Eggert's brother, Páll, are unknown, but his name is found in various places in B4875, so he had to be at least temporarily an owner of the manuscript. It is not certain whether Eggert or Páll is responsible for the sale of B4875 to Banks, but as Eggert was attending Skálholtsskóli in the same year when Banks visited Skálholt, it is probable that it was through his network that the manuscript made its way into the hands of the British collector.<sup>86</sup>

If we assume that B4875 was sold to Joseph Banks around the time of Banks's visit to Skálholt in 1772, then it can be argued that L222 had to be already somewhere else, meaning not in Eggert's

83. Páll Eggert Ólason, Íslenzkar æviskrár, II:234.

84. This suggests that B4857 was written in Eyri, assuming that Eggert was still living with his parents and had not yet gone to Skálholt in 1763.

85. Páll Eggert Ólason, Íslenzkar æviskrár, III:474–475; Bogi Benediktsson, Sýslumannaefir, II:231.

86. Another attractive possibility is that it was not Eggert himself who was responsible for the sale of B4875 to Banks, but his son-in-law Teitur Jónsson (1742–1815), who was in contact with Joseph Banks after Banks's visit to Skálholt, as the correspondence to Banks proves. Teitur, however, married Eggert's daughter Sesselja in 1811, so long after the last manuscript from Banks's collection was donated to the British Museum. Páll Eggert Ólason, Íslenzkar æviskrár, V:7; Anna Agnarsdóttir, Sir Joseph Banks, Iceland and the North Atlantic 1772–1820: Journals, Letters and Documents, 166–167, 632.

or Páll's possession, otherwise it would most likely also have been sold to Banks.<sup>87</sup> Therefore L222 had to leave the family of Magnús Jónsson's descendants shortly after B4875 was copied in 1763, but before it was sold to Banks in 1772.

If this entire hypothetical history of ownership of L222 is correct, it still remains difficult to explain how L222 got into the hands of Kjartan Ólafsson. Kjartan's family is, however, associated with Ísafjarðarsýla, and he himself was a hreppstjóri residing at Tröð in Önundarfjörðu, while descendants of Magnús Jónsson's also resided in that area. For example Magnús's great-granddaughter Gunnhildur was married to the minister of Holt in Önundarfjörðu during the years 1761–1783, Jón Eggertsson (1731–1783), and his other great-granddaughter Pórkatla Magnúsdóttir was married to Jón Ásgeirsson, the minister of Holt during the years 1796–1810.<sup>88</sup> Therefore there is a high possibility that these two families were in contact and at some point exchanged manuscripts.

This section discussed a pair of manuscripts that illustrate how manuscripts might have circulated in Icelandic families for several generations in the post-medieval period. At the same time, this pair is a good example of the branch of the stemma which has 'died out' due to the acquisition of the manuscript by a foreign collector, as no known text of 17HsG is derived from B4875.

87. There is a number of manuscripts in Banks's collection which previously belonged to Magnús Jónsson í Vigur, among them B4859.

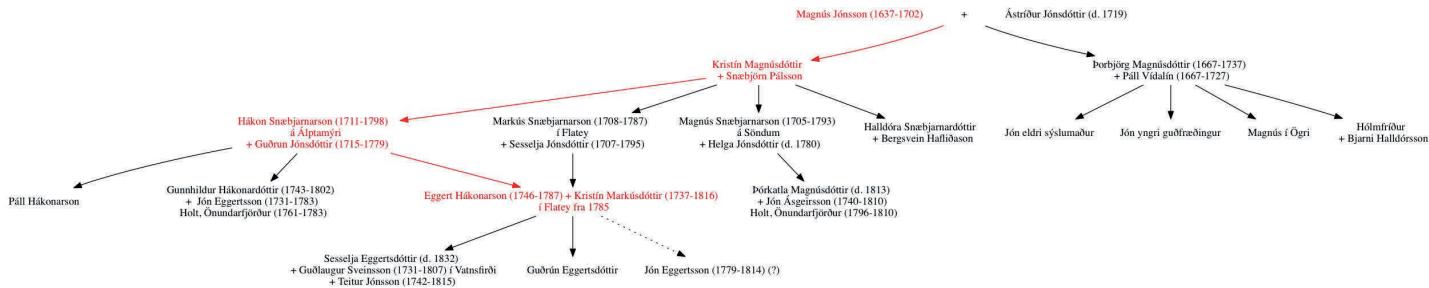

Figure 3.4: Magnús Jónsson's descendants and the hypothetical history of ownership of Lbs 222 fol. (represented by the red lines)

Text-sub-group B<sub>3</sub>

Text-sub-group B<sub>3</sub> has been distinguished to focus on two manuscripts, L633 and A395, which are very closely related to each other and both appear to be descendants of B4859. In fact, they demonstrate the transmission of 17HsG from one manuscript to another, starting from B4859 to L633 and then to A395. In practice, text-sub-group B<sub>3</sub> includes two younger manuscripts:

- Lbs 633 fol. (L633), dated to 1695–1721,<sup>89</sup>
- AM 395 fol. (A395), dated to 1760–1766.<sup>90</sup>

The textual dependence of L633 and A395 on B4859 is clear from their shared readings that reproduce the innovations of B4859, which are absent from the rest of the tradition, such as:<sup>91</sup>

Rafn] B4859, B<sub>3</sub>.

sem vo Hraungvið] sem drap Hraungvið.

ok rendi sverðit ofan í (völlinn) upp at hjöltum] en sverðið sökk í völlinn að hjöltum.

Similarly to the case of B<sub>2</sub>, to find clear evidence for the relationship between B4859 and B<sub>3</sub> we can turn to the episode describing the conversation between Svanhvít and Ólafur. As outlined above, L222 introduced a reading indicating that Hrómundur will ‘gælgann gysta þott hann sie frækni kallaþr’. Meanwhile, B4859 shares the sentiment but modifies it ever so slightly, stating in a

---

89. L633 was previously broadly dated to the eighteenth century, but since the manuscript was commissioned by Lauritz Gottrup (1648–1721), his death must be the terminus ante quem, see L. Blöndal, Skrá Auk II, 18 and the online catalogue entry archived on 20/03/2024 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20240320190431/https://handrit.is/manuscript/view/is/Lbs02-0633>.

90. A395 was previously broadly dated to the eighteenth century, but recently the dating has been narrowed down to 1760–1766, see Kålund, Katalog over den Arnamagnæanske Håndskriftsamling, I:305 and the online catalogue entry archived on 20/02/2024 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20240220121044/https://handrit.is/manuscript/view/is/AM02-0395>.

91. Where relevant, the variants are given in full diplomatic transcription to show that even the orthography of these two manuscripts is similar.

straightforward manner that ‘Hromundr heingdr verþa, þott hann se frækinn’. Both, L633 on p. 637 and A395 on p. 360, reproduce this reading.

The close relationship between A395 and L633 is also confirmed by the following shared innovations which are absent from B4859:

B4859] B<sub>3</sub>.

‘Sa kongur rieþi fyrir Gaurþom er Olafur het’] ‘Olafur het kongur er riedi firi Gaurþom’ (L633), ‘Olafur hét kongur er rede fyrir Gaurdom’ (A395), ‘hann var frægr madr’] ‘fréijr madr’ (L633), ‘fréijr madr’ (A395), ‘uar i fylgd med konungi’] var í liði með konungi (L633, A395),

‘vist ertu Rauztr’ (B4859)] vist ertu róskur (L633, A395).

There are no readings that would suggest that A395 could be the exemplar of L633, and no readings which suggest that they are siblings. L633 does not introduce any significant readings not reproduced in A395, but A395 contains some independent innovations, such as:

B4859, L633] A395.

og jafnan sigur] ‘og Jafnan(n) sigur hafft’ fyrir sverðsins oddi] ‘fjær er sverð sitt’, tekur upp merki Konungs og lemur med kylfunni Blámenn til dauða] ÷.

The most convincing piece of evidence that A395 is a descendant of L633 is the omission of the entire sentence ‘tekur upp merki Konungs og lemur med kylfunni Blámenn til dauða’. This omission is a homeoteleuton: the word ‘dauða’ appears twice in close proximity, at the end of lines 15 and 16 on page 634 of L633, and the scribe of A395 simply skipped one sentence and resumed writing from the second occurrence of the word.

It is worth noting here that Slay arrived at the same conclusion regarding the relationship between the texts of Mírmanns saga in A395 and L633.<sup>92</sup> He supported his hypothesis by observing that when A395 was written at Akrar in Mýrasýsla, L633 belonged to Kár Ólafsson from Munaðarnes, also in Mýrasýsla, so it is likely L633 served as a direct exemplar for A395. Elsewhere, I suggested, furthermore, that L633 could have served as a direct exemplar for more texts preserved in the second part of A395, not only 17HsG, but this requires further stemmatic examination of other sagas.<sup>93</sup>

Lbs 633 fol.

Lbs 633 fol. (L633), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is an impressive paper manuscript in folio, which consists of iv+576+i leaves.<sup>94</sup> L633, and the texts preserved in it, have received a substantial amount of scholarly attention, compared to other post-medieval manuscripts.<sup>95</sup> The manuscript has been broadly dated to the eighteenth century, but according to the title page (firs front flylea recto), it was re-bound in 1760:

On the following leaf (second front flylea recto), there is a table of contents which lists the 34 items of this manuscript. These are: Víga-Glúms saga, Reykdæla saga, Finnboga saga ramma, Kormáks saga, Grettis saga, Bárðar saga Snæfellsáss, Gísla saga Súrssonar, Hávarðar saga Ísfirðings, Odds þáttur Ófeigssonar, Búa saga Andriðssonar, Jökuls þáttur Búasonar, Ármanns saga og Þorsteins gála, Ketils saga hængs, Gríms saga loðinkinna, Örvar-Odds saga, 17HsG (ff 319r-322v), Áns saga bogsveigis, Bragða-Ölvís saga, Mírmanns saga, Kirjalax saga, Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar, Elís saga og Rósamundu, Fertrams saga og Platós, Friðþjófs saga, Villhjálms saga sjóðs, Sörla saga sterka, Nikulás saga leikara, Adónías saga, Hrólfss saga kraka, Úlfss saga Uggasonar, Böðvars þáttur bjarka, Hervarar saga og Heiðreks, Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra, and Bærings saga. Additionally, there is a loose leaf kept at the rear of the manuscript, which contains a previously unidentifi d fragment of Grettis saga.<sup>96</sup> 17HsG is written on a single quire of two conjoint leaves (320+323, 321+322) which is quire LXIV of the manuscript with a signature ‘Lll’. Slay divided the book-block of L633 into fift en units of writing based on the changes in writing.<sup>97</sup> 17HsG belongs to Unit A, together with Gríms saga loðinkinna and Örvar-Odds saga, occupying ten gatherings (pp. 535–640). To the same unit of writing also belongs Bragða-Ölvís saga (one gathering) and Mírmanns saga (four gatherings) (pp. 665–712). The scribe has not yet been identifi d.

There are two slips that have been included in the book block after the conservation, which provide useful information about the manuscript’s history of ownership. The firs one is badly damaged but, according to Slay, the note contains information that the manuscript was commissioned by Lauritz Gottrup.<sup>98</sup> Lauritz Gottrup (1648–1721) lived at Þingeyrar in Northern Iceland between 1684 and 1721, suggesting that the manuscript was probably written at Þingeyrar.<sup>99</sup> All that can be read today of the signature is ‘L Goot’.<sup>100</sup> It is important to emphasise here that B4859, as discussed in Section 2.3, which contains the text of 17HsG that is the textual ancestor of 17HsG in L633, was around that time in Páll Vídalín’s possession in Víðidalstunga in Vestur-Húnnavatnssýsla, so in close proximity to Lauritz Gottrup’s residence.

The text corresponds to chapter 30 in Gísli Magnússon and Gunnlaugur Þórðarson’s edition, Gísli Magnússon and Gunnlaugur Þórðarson, Grettis saga, 69. The text of Grettis saga in L633 does not follow the same chapter division as the edition and the fragment belongs to chapter 26 according to the text division in L633. The loose leaf should be inserted between ff 117v and 118r. It seems, however, that the leaf was never a part of this gathering; perhaps the scribe supplied it when he realised he had skipped a few sentences of the text.

97. The description of the manuscript’s quires can be found in Slay, ‘The Make-up of Lbs 633 fol.’, 737.

The second note is more legible and it provides information about the previous owner of the manuscript, and from whom and when he received the book:

Þessa sógu Bok hefur mier giefed minn Elskulegur | modur
frænde og Broder Þorbiørn salugie Biarnna son Anno 1740

Some of the names appearing in the manuscript can be easily identified. Kár Ólafsson (1740–1804) from Munaðarnes was a brother of Þorbjörn ‘ríki’ Ólafsson (1750–1827), a goldsmith from Lundar. Their parents were Ólafur Jónsson (1713–1789) and Guðríður Káradóttir (1710–1753). Kár was married to Jórunn Bjarnadóttir (1738–1800).<sup>101</sup>

The note indicates that Kár received this manuscript from a certain Þorbjörn Bjarnason, to whom he refers as a móðurfrændi og broðir. This must be Þorbjörn Bjarnason from Síðumúla (ca. 1671–1763 or 1767).<sup>102</sup> According to Borgfirzkar æviskrár, Ólafur Jónsson, Kár's father, when he was a young man in his twenties, used to live with a certain Þorbjörn Bjarnason, whose foster daughter and a relative he eventually married. Þorbjörn Bjarnason died childless, and some of his goods ended up in the possession of Ólafur's heirs.<sup>103</sup> It is not surprising then that Ólafur's son, Kár, at the age of ten, received this magnificent volume as a gift from his 'almost' grandfather, Þorbjörn.<sup>104</sup>

Finally, there is a signature on the title page of L633, which reads 'BBenedicti possesor', attributed to Bogi Benediktsson (1771–1849), a manuscript collector and an expert in Icelandic genealogy and history.<sup>105</sup>

The catalogue of manuscripts in the National and University Library of Iceland traces the history of ownership of L633 from 1956 when the library bought this manuscript from Jón 'skáld úr Vör' (1917–2000), to Sigríður Brynjólfsdóttir Benedictsen (1834–1912), a daughter of Brynjólfur Benedictsen (1807–1870), who was the son of Bogi Benediktsson.<sup>106</sup> It is unknown how the manuscript ended up among Bogi's possessions. The link between Kár Ólafsson and Bogi Benediktsson remains to be revealed by further archival work to gain an overview of the complete history of ownership of this manuscript.

AM 395 fol. (A395), held in the Stofnun Árna Magnússonar í íslenskum fræðum in Reykjavík, is an eighteenth-century manuscript which consists of 468 leaves.<sup>107</sup> A395 contains the following

The sagas are followed by two tables of contents, one of which classifies sagas according to their historical value. It groups the contents of the volume into three groups: ‘true stories, or those very close to truth’, ‘intermediate stories, or hybrids of truth and falsehood’ (where 17HsG appears), and ‘entirely fictional stories or lying sagas’.<sup>109</sup>

Slay has suggested that A395 was written by four different scribes: Scribe A wrote Ljósvetninga saga on pp. 5–76 (pp. 77–81 blank), Scribe B wrote Valla-Ljóts saga on pp. 82–107 (pp. 108–111 blank), Scribe C wrote sagas on pp. 112–350 (pp. 351–352 blank), and Scribe D wrote the rest of the manuscript (pp. 353–972), including 17HsG.<sup>110</sup>

While Scribe C can be identified as a certain Þorkell Sigurðsson, thanks to two signed colophons, the other hands in the manuscript have remained unidentified.<sup>111</sup> Slay’s description of the writing is Handrit.org, the manuscript counts 469 leaves, see the description, archived on 09/07/2022 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20220709061534/https://handrit.is/manuscript/view/is/AM02-0395> (last accessed on 20/02/2024). This discrepancy is due to the foliation in the manuscript being incorrect, as number 455 was skipped. Elsewhere, only the page count of 974 is provided, cf. Seidel, Textvarianz und Textstabilität: Studien zur Transmission der Ívens saga, Ereks saga und Parcevals saga, 83–84; Slay, Mírmanns saga, lxvi–lxvii.

108. This text is not complete and not mentioned in the table of contents; there is no rubric, and the þáttur appears as a continuation of the preceding saga.

111. Blaisdell suggested that ‘AM 395 fol. [...] shows various hands’ without specifying how many hands he distinguishes in the manuscript, Blaisdell, Ívens saga, cxxxviii. Blaisdell refers to Jónas Kristjánsson’s edition of Valla-Ljóts saga and the Antiquarisk Tidskrift 1846–1848 (published in 1847) as his sources, but neither of them provides a detailed description of scribal hands. Jónas Kristjánsson suggested that ‘Valla-Ljóts saga skriver synes kun at have skrevet denne very accurate. There are indeed clear shifts of script in the manuscript, which follow his division into four scribes. The question remains, however, whether these four different script types could not have been used by the same person.<sup>112</sup> After all, Slay himself successfully demonstrated in the case of L633 that fifteen different units of writing could have actually been written by only six scribes.<sup>113</sup>

Elsewhere, I argued that Porkell, the scribe of A395, is Porkell Sigurðsson, known as Laga-Móri.<sup>114</sup> In this section I present some evidence suggesting that Scribes C and D of A395 are actually a single scribe, Porkell Sigurðsson, Laga-Móri.

Porkell Sigurðsson, the son of Sigurður Högnason, a sýslumaður from Akrar, was born around 1724. He earned his nickname, Laga-Móri, due to his extensive knowledge of law.<sup>115</sup> He was considered a skilled and prolific scribe, as evidenced by the number of manuscripts written in his hand, including Rask 8a,<sup>116</sup> Lbs 839 4to, dated to 1770–1771,<sup>117</sup> JS 42 4to, dated to 1780,<sup>118</sup> parts of ÍBR 28 8vo, written around 1760,<sup>119</sup> and Lbs 3623 4to from around 1756.<sup>120</sup>

Already the note describing the manuscript in Antiquarisk Tidskrift 1846–1848 (p. 154) implied that A395 was written by one person, stating that the manuscript was ‘rituð með skýrri snarhönd að framan en fl ótaskript aptantil, herumbil 1764, af P. Sigurðssyni á Ökrum’ (written with a clear humanistic script at the beginning saga’, but he did not comment on the rest of the manuscript, Jónas Kristjánsson, Valla-Ljóts saga, xviii–xix. The most recent description on Handrit.org is also ambiguous, identifying two scribes, a certain Porkell Sigurðsson (ff. 1r–173v), and an unknown scribe (from f. 175r), see the online catalogue entry archived on 9/07/2022 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20220709061534/><https://handrit.is/manuscript/view/is/AM02-0395>. Note that the Handrit record points to a generic authority file entry for Porkell Sigurðsson, without any biographical information.

and cursive at the end, around 1764, by P. Sigurðsson from Akrar). This conclusion is clearly based on the internal evidence of the manuscript. From a colophon on f. 173v, we learn that Porkell was based at Akrar in Mýrasýsla in western Iceland, ‘endud á Økrum d. 21<sup>ta</sup> Martii 1764’.<sup>121</sup> A very similar signature can be found in Lbs 1061 4to on f. 11v, where the colophon following Ragnars saga loðbrókar reads that the saga was completed at Hamrar, ‘endud þann 16<sup>da</sup> Maii 1778 ad Haumrumm i hraunhrepp af Thorkel Sigurdar-syne’. Similarly, the signature on f. 14r closely resembles the hand-writing found in the second part of A395.<sup>122</sup>

The comparison of the script in the second part of A395 with the colophons signed by Porkell in the first part of A395, Lbs 1061 4to, and Rask 8a allows us to assume that the entire manuscript is in Porkell’s hand. In Lbs 1061 4to, we can clearly see that Porkell was using cursive script and book hand in the same manuscript.<sup>123</sup> Even though the script is not identical, there are some common features in all three manuscripts which point towards the same scribe, for instance, the shape of the word-initial ‘h’ and the word-initial ‘k’, the slope of the connection between ‘s’ and ‘k’. The presence of two types of ‘g’: the ‘g’ with an open lower part and with a closed lower part also does not seem accidental. The scribe uses, similarly, two types of ‘d’: the ‘d’ with a lobe and the ‘d’ with a shaft, and both types appear in the examined samples of Porkell’s script. Additionally, the scribe of 17HsG uses the book-hand script to write the personal names and the place names in an otherwise cursive-written text, and his book hand seems to be very similar to Porkell’s writing in the first part of A395.<sup>124</sup>

121. Images of the manuscript are available on Sprogsamlinger.ku.dk, archived on 20/02/2024 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20240220113614/https://sprogsamlinger.ku.dk/q.php?p=ds/hjem/mapper/29315>.

122. This implies that Porkell was living in Akrar around 1764 and around 1778 in Hamrar. Both places are in Mýrasýsla.

123. It appears that in his later years, Porkell started to use cursive more frequently than earlier, as the texts in Porkell’s hand in Lbs 1061 4to were copied in 1778 and we see a mixture of cursive and book hand, while in JS 42 4to, dated to ca. 1780, cursive dominates. Still, the cursive of JS 42 4to is much different from the cursive of the second part of A395.

124. For a further description of the hand, see: Kapitan, ‘Studies in the Transmission History of Hrómundar saga Greipssonar’, 95–102. The use of different script types for personal names, or different types of texts is a fairly common practice in early modern Iceland; for more on the different functions of various script

There are two notes on the first leaf of A395 providing some clues regarding the history of ownership of this manuscript. The first note is written in ink at the bottom of the page and reads ‘kiöbt paa sysselmand Jon Arnesens l auction [d.] 4 Janu. 1779. l cst 3 Rd:’ (bought at the auction of the district administrator Jón Árnason on 4 January 1779 for 3 rigsdallers). Jón Árnason was a sýslumaður from Ingjaldshóll on Snæfellsnes. He is known to have owned a large collection of books and manuscripts,<sup>125</sup> which, as the note indicates, was sold in 1779.<sup>126</sup>

Another note is written in pencil in the top margin and reads ‘libris Birgeri Thorlacii’. Birgir (or Børge) Thorlacius (1775–1829) was a professor of classics at the University of Copenhagen, as well as an editor and translator of Icelandic sagas. He was the son of Skúli Thorlacius (1741–1815), a philologist and a member of the Arnamagnæan Commission, as well as rector of the Latin school in Kolding..<sup>127</sup> As discussed in greater detail elsewhere, it was most likely Skúli Thorlacius who bought A395 at the auction and then passed it on to his son.

After Birgir Thorlacius’s death, the manuscript was auctioned in Copenhagen on 6 September 1830, listed in the auction catalogue as number 8, but it is unknown who acquired it afterwards. It seems likely that someone purchased the manuscript at this auction and later donated it to Det kongelige Nordiske Oldskriftselskab around 1847, when we can read about this manuscript in Antiquarisk Tidskrift 1846–1848. A395 became part of the Arnamagnæan collection in 1883, when it was donated by Det kongelige Nord-

Text-sub-group B<sub>4</sub>: Kall 614 4to

Kall 614 4to (K614), held in Det Kongelige Bibliotek in Copenhagen, is an eighteenth-century paper manuscript in quarto.<sup>128</sup> The manuscript consists of i+199+i leaves. It opens with a table of contents (on firs flyleaf and contains an eclectic collection of texts in the following order: Sigurðar saga þögla, Gibbons saga, Draumajóns saga, 17HsG (ff 60r-64v), Konráðs saga keisarasonar, Úlfars saga sterka, Porsteins þáttur bæjarmagns, Haralds saga Hringsbana, Hákonar þáttur Hárekssonar, Egils þáttur Síðu-Hallssonar, Porsteins þáttur forvitna, Pjalar-Jóns saga, Virgilíus saga, Eiríks saga viðförla, Ævintýri af Assversus gyðingi, Nokkuð minnilegt um forföðurinn Adam, Idolum Judaicum, Det gamle Grønlands nye Perlustration, followed by a list of sagas, a genealogy from biblical Adam to bishop Jón Arason, and closes with another table of contents.

It is uncertain when exactly K614 was copied and by whom, but the manuscript is certainly a product of the eighteenth century. It must post-date 1729, as it contains a text that was translated in 1729, namely Ny umferð til Skodunar hinnar fornū Grønlands bigdar.

The ownership and provenance of this manuscript remain unknown. According to the Stories for all time catalogue, Johan Christian Kall (1714–1775), a Danish philologist and professor at the University of Copenhagen, purportedly owned this manuscript.<sup>129</sup> However, this claim has not been verified or refuted. What is certain is that K614 was in the possession of J. C. Kall's son, Abraham Kall (1743–1821), who was also a professor at the University of Copenhagen. Following Abraham Kall's death, his book collection was purchased by the Royal Library in Copenhagen and this is where the manuscript is today.<sup>130</sup> er Greipur hét] Sá hét Greipur.

The text of 17HsG preserved in K614 is more closely related to A345 than to L222 or B4859, as illustrated by the following examples:

A345, K614] L222, B4859.

hvorn dag fyrir sverðsins oddi] hvern dag mann fyrir sverðsins oddi.

The last reading is especially useful in establishing the relationship between K614 and A345, as it seems to correct an omission introduced in A345. The two manuscripts read as follows:

- A345: ‘hvorn dag firir Sverdsins Odde’;
- K614: ‘hvorn dag fyrir suerdens odde einn m[a]nn’.

All other manuscripts in text-group B read Hraungviður mátti kjósa hvern dag mann fyrir sverðsins oddi, but A345 omitted ‘mann’. The scribe of K614 reproduced the omission, but then added ‘einn mann’ at the end of the sentence to counterbalance the somewhat odd grammatical construction caused by the omission. This minor variation, in the absence of contrary evidence, can be considered sufficient to conclude that K614 is a descendant of A345.

Finally, for consistency’s sake, some examples of independent innovations in K614, which are absent from other manuscripts, must be provided. They illustrate that none of the examined texts can descend from K614, as no manuscript reproduces them. These readings include, for example:

‘hann var frægur madur’] ∵.

‘scal ek hauggua þic j Smä stycke’] ‘skal eg hoggva þig i smä mola og stike’.

Text-sub-group B<sub>5</sub>: Lbs 4825 4to

Lbs 4825 4to (L4825), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in quarto which consists of 278+i leaves. The manuscript can be divided into two main parts, ff 1–145 and ff 146–271, written in three hands at the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century.<sup>131</sup>

The volume starts with a table of contents, followed by Ambáles saga written in two different hands,<sup>132</sup> Gunnars saga Keldugnúpsfifls, Egils saga einhenda og Ásmundar berserkjabana, Króka-Refs saga, and then in another hand: Konráðs saga keisarasonar, 17HsG (ff 165r–173r), Sigurðar saga turnara, Sigurðar saga fóts, Haralds saga Hringsbana, Sigurgarðs saga frækna, Flóres saga og Blankiflúr, Auðunar þáttur vestfírska, and Ævintýri af Valltara hertoga.

The ownership history of this manuscript remains largely unknown, aside from its purchase in 1977 by the National Library of Iceland from Indriði Indriðason (1908–2008).<sup>133</sup>

The text of 17HsG clearly belongs to text-group B, as it reproduces, for example, our favourite reading of ‘kú’ for ‘ský’. Its textual relationship with the remaining manuscripts in text-group B appears to be somewhat more complex. L4825 cannot be a descendant of L222, as it does not reproduce the individual readings of L222, such as:

og háð LX orrustur] og hefi háð LX orrustur.

Um veturinn] Um morguninn.

Similarly, L4825 cannot be a descendant of B4859, due to readings such as:

gaf honum fé] og gaf honum mikið fé.

131. Grímur Helgason and Ögmundur Helgason, Skrá Auk IV, 138.

132. The table of contents and the beginning of the saga have been supplied later, probably due to some damage of the first leaves of the original manuscript.

133. Handrit.org, archived on 9/07/2022 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20220709061448/https://handrit.is/manuscript/view/is/Lbs04-4825/>.

sem vó Hraungvið] sem drap Hraugvið.

Nor can it be a descendant of the common ancestor of L222 and B4859, which I refer to as B<sub>0</sub>, due to readings such as:

er þér er vopnbært] er þú getur valldið.

Furthermore, L4825 cannot be a descendant of A345, due to readings such as:

L222, B4859, L4825] A345.

Sá hét Greipur] er Greipur hét.

hélt Ólafur konungur austur] hélt Ólafur norður.

Taking all these readings into account, we must assume that L4825 is a descendant of B, the common ancestor of all manuscripts in text-group B.

Lastly, it is worth mentioning a number of omissions in L4825, which are not found in any other manuscript within text-group B. Consequently, L4825 cannot be considered an ancestor of any other known manuscript of 17HsG. Some of these omissions include:

er hann kom heim og krufði gedduna] ÷.

líktist mjög Hróki möður föður sínum] ÷.

Manuscript context of 17HsG: Text-group B

Texts of eighty-seven works appear together with 17HsG in the manuscripts classified as members of text-group B. Twenty-three of them co-occur with 17HsG more than once, and only six of them appear three or more times: Bragða-Ölvis saga, Ála fletks saga, Hákonar þáttur Hárekssonar, Mírmanns saga, Sigurðar saga fóts, and

Úlfssaga Uggasonar. These texts are mainly sagas classified as rid-darasögur and late fornaldarsögur.<sup>134</sup>

It should be emphasised that most of these sagas listed above did not co-occur frequently with 17HsG in the oldest manuscripts, except for one: Bragða-Ölvís saga. Bragða-Ölvís saga appears together with 17HsG in four out of seven of the younger manuscripts in this group and it was also the most frequently co-occurring saga in the oldest manuscripts (see Section 2.4). These two texts, which most likely share their origins, also circulated together in some of the younger manuscripts: L840, B4875, L633, A395. It is possible that they were copied one after another from the exemplars. Considering text-group B as a whole, we can assume that in B4875 these sagas were probably copied directly from L222, or its reliable descendant, and they appear one after another in both manuscripts. We have to wait for the analysis of textual relationships between Bragða-Ölvís saga in these manuscripts to confirm this hypothesis, but it seems promising. Similarly, in A395 and L633, these two sagas are separated by Áns saga bogsveigis but they appear in the same order in both manuscripts. My preliminary examination of select other texts in A395 makes me assume that some of them were copied one after another, but further research on this is needed.

134. The generic classification of Hákonar þáttur Hárekssonar is problematic, see the discussion of its sources by Overgaard and Lanjala, Hákonar Saga Hárekssonar.

3.3 Manuscripts derived from printed editions

All manuscripts of 17HsG discussed so far are derived from other manuscripts that served as their exemplars. In this section, we turn towards manuscripts that preserve the texts of 17HsG derived from printed editions. All of these manuscripts share a common feature: they reproduce the errors originating from the editions, and most of them, with J102 being an exception, explicitly divide the texts of the saga into ten chapters. Although none of the scribes explicitly stated anywhere in the manuscript that the texts are copied from a printed edition, based on textual criteria, it is certain that five of these manuscripts are based on Rafn's Fornaldar sögur Nordrlanda eptir gömlum handritum, text-sub-group A<sub>3</sub> (Section 3.3), and two are based on Björner's Nordiska kämpa dater, text-group C (Section 3.3).<sup>135</sup>

Text-sub-group A<sub>3</sub>

In addition to chapter divisions (see the overview in Figure 3.1), errors introduced in Rafn's edition are the best indicators of whether a particular manuscript is a copy of the edition, or of A587, the base text of the edition. There are five manuscripts that can be classified as descendants of Rafn's edition, and they all post-date the publication of Fornaldar sögur Nordrlanda eptir gömlum handritum in 1829–30. In chronological order, these are:

- Lbs 3795 8vo (L3795), dated to 1831,
- JS 102 8vo (J102), dated to 1832,
- Lbs 2316 4to (L2316), dated to 1850,
- Lbs 2943 4to (L2943), dated to 1885,
- Lbs 4460 8vo (L4460), dated to 1892.

All these manuscripts preserve texts of 17HsG that are independent of each other. There is no example of major variants introduced in one manuscript being reproduced in another (see the stemma in Figure 3.2 on page 101). What connects them is the fact that they all reproduce the error introduced in Rafn's edition

where the name of Helgi's mistress has been misread as 'Lara' or 'Lára' instead of 'Kara' or 'Kára':

A587] Rafn, A<sub>3</sub>.

hún hét Cara] hún hét 'Lara (lara eða Cara L3795).

datt Cara dauð niður] datt (+ þá J102) Lara (+ þá L2943) dauð niður.

No known manuscript of 17HsG misreads 'Kara' as 'Lara' independently from the edition. It is worth to remind ourselves that this misreading is Rafn's editorial error. It can be traced back to A587, where the shape of the letter 'C' resembles the letter 'L'.

The textual independence of these manuscripts is well manifested, for example, in the fina part of the saga, as illustrated in Figure 3.5. The texts diff r greatly in describing that after all the great achievements of Hrómundur, he eventually settled with Svanhvít and they lived happily ever after.

Even these few examples show how diff rently scribes treated the text of the edition. In two manuscripts, L2943 and L3795, the text is remarkably changed. The scribe of L3795 supplied additional information about the descendants of Hrómundur. Meanwhile, the scribe of L2943 expressed his knowledge of other stories dealing with the same characters. The remaining manuscripts, J102, L2316, and L4460, contain no additions in this part of the saga, but the text is not unchanged. In L4460, the text is noticeably abridged, while the closing sentence of L2316 is reformulated. J102, on the other hand, attempts to be a reliable copy but introduces an error by referring to Svanhvít as Ólafur's daughter, rather than his sister.

Lbs 3795 8vo (L3795), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in octavo consisting of iii+244+ii leaves.<sup>136</sup> The firs three leaves are made of bluish paper and are a later addition. The third flylea contains a title page: 'Sögubók | af | Forn konungum | Nordurlanda | og köppum | ásamt | nokkrum | Íslendinga | sögum' (A saga-book about ancient kings and champions of the Nordic countries, together with some Icelandic sagas).

On the verso side of the same leaf, there is a table of contents listing fourteen texts preserved in this manuscript, mainly fornaldarsögur and þættir: Sögubrot af nokkrum fornkonungum, Ragnarssonar þáttur, Þorsteins saga Þíkingssonar, Friðþjófs saga, Af Upplendinga konungum, Sneglu-Halla þáttur, Böðvars þáttur bjarka, Hrólfs saga kraka, Hálfs saga og Hálfsrekka, 17HsG (ff 165r-171r), Ásmundar saga kappabana, Bjarnar saga Hítðelakappa, Hrafnkels saga Freysgoða, and Hjálmpérs saga, which is defective and not listed in the table of contents.

17HsG, according to the colophon on f. 171r, was copied on 29 March 1831. The manuscript is written mainly in one hand, with the exception of ff 54–7, which are a later addition. On f. 220v, there are the initials ‘J:e:s:’, suggesting that the manuscript was written by Jón Eirksson from Prándarstaðir (or Prándarholt).<sup>137</sup> It is the same scribe who wrote the first part of ÍB 76 4to<sup>138</sup> and ÍBR 38 8vo.<sup>139</sup> While there was some confusion in scholarship regarding whether Jón should be associated with Prándarstaðir or Prándarholt, Guðrún Ása Grímsdóttir associated ÍB 76 4to with Prándarstaðir in Kjósarsýsla, and this seems to be a correct identification.<sup>140</sup>

As indicated by a note on flylea 2v, which reads ‘Helgi Jónsson Pröm No. 96’, L3795 was part of the book collection of Helgi Jónsson (1877–1954) from Pröm, who is known to have owned a large library of diverse works.<sup>141</sup> The National Library of Iceland acquired the manuscript on 6 September 1969 from Sigurður Benediktsson (1911–1970). It is unknown how Sigurður obtained this manuscript and whether he had access to other manuscripts from Helgi's collection, but the online catalogue Handrit.org currently associates only two more manuscripts with Sigurður, and no additional manuscripts with Helgi.<sup>142</sup> However, Páll Eggert Ólason associated two more manuscripts with Helgi, Lbs 2657 8vo and Lbs 2846 8vo.<sup>143</sup> None of them has an online record yet, but Lbs 2657 8vo is written by Helgi, as multiple notes throughout the manuscript suggest, for example, the colophon on p. 377, 'Helgi Jónsson Pröm 1905'. Lbs 2846 8vo, on the other hand, was definitely a part of Helgi's collection, as it has a note on the verso side of the first flyleaf similar to that in L3795, 'Helgi Jónsson Pröm No. 15'.

The relationship between the edition and L3795 can be easily established based on an obvious error present in L3795, which originates from Rafn's edition: 'og saung hatt hun hiet lara eða Cara' (f. 168v:11). Rafn in his edition included the reading 'hún hèt Lara', for which he provided a variant 'eða Lára; Cara, allstaðar B, C.'. The scribe of L3795 included both the reading of the main text as well as the one provided by the variant apparatus, creating a strange hybrid 'lara eða Cara' with a t-like character between these two words, which functions as the Latin abbreviation 'ꝑ' for 'vel' (or). Elsewhere in the text, the name Lára ('lara' f. 169r:10) appears. Finally, we can mention that the orthography of the manuscript diverges greatly from the edition, but the scribe only rarely introduces minor textual variants, such as:

Rafn] L3795.

er aldrí hefi sljófgast] 'ok hefur en alldrei sliofgast'.

JS 102 8vo

JS 102 8vo (J102), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in octavo consisting of 54 leaves. The manuscript is in rather poor condition and is kept in an unbound form with loose leaves stored between cardboard boards tied with a cloth strap. There is some loss of text on the edges of the leaves as a result of earlier damage and repairs. JS 102 8vo preserves five texts: ‘Eýn výsa med Jón’, Jóhönnuraunir, 17HsG (ff 21v–31v), Eitt kvæði er nefnist hugar fundar, and ‘Ríma af Jóni upplanda kongi’. 17HsG is followed by the colophon dated to 1832.

On the first leaf, there is a note identifying the main text of the manuscript and associating it with a certain Filippus Jónsson: ‘Filippus | Jonsson | A Blodinn | med [Já]ttu [or réttu?] | Johonnu Raunir’ (Filippus Jónsson rightfully owns these leaves, Jóhönnuraunir). According to Páll Eggert Ólason, J102 was not only owned but also written by Filippus Jónsson from Ísabakki and at least two more manuscripts can be associated with him: JS 23 8vo (dated to 1833–1835 and 1817) and JS 43 8vo (dated to ca. 1835).<sup>144</sup>

Considering the lack of biographic information in the catalogue, we must assume that this is Filippus Jónsson listed in the 1816 census as a seven-year-old boy at Ísabakki, son of Jón Magnússon and Ásta Erlendsdóttir. In the 1845 census, he is listed as married to Sigríður Jónsdóttir with four children, Guðmundur, Filippus, Augusta, and Johannes, who was seven at the time. In 1850, we find them with three children, Filippus, Ágústa, and Jóhanna, who was eleven at that time.<sup>145</sup>

This discrepancy concerning their children, Jóhannes born around 1838 and/or Jóhanna born around 1839, raises questions about the manuscript’s ownership and provenance. According to the note on the front flyleaf Jón Sigurðsson acquired J102 in 1865 from a certain Jóhann Filippusson from Arnarnes, ‘Jóhann Filippusson í Arnarnesi 18/9 65’. Meanwhile, only a certain Jóhannes Filippusson, not Jóhann, was registered in the 1860 census as a twenty-two-year-old fisherman living at Oddakot in Gullbringusýsla. Considering mix-ups between Jóhann and Jóhannes are not unheard of, and unless we assume gender fluidity among Filippus' children, it is likely that there is an error in the online edition of the 1850 census and that Jóhannes was Filippus' son born around 1838/9, and then Jón Sigurðsson obtained J102 directly from him.

J102 has been classified as a descendant of Rafn's edition mainly because of its textual similarity to the edition. It reproduces the error Lára for Kára, and even though it does not contain clearly numbered chapters, there are some indications of a chapter division which overlaps with Rafn's chapters. For example, on f. 29v, there is a number sign where the chapter division in the edition occurs. A similar symbol appears on f. 28v, where it also denotes the chapter division. In some places, such as ff. 26v and 27r, the space between the last word of one chapter and the first word of the following chapter seems to be slightly larger than usual.

As previously mentioned, J102 is in poor condition. The ink has faded, and there is a loss of text on almost every line of the manuscript, which makes the collation of variants difficult. There are frequent grammatical and orthographic errors in the manuscript, which, along with the irregular script, suggest that it was not a 'professional' scribe who copied the text of 17HsG. Among the minor readings of J102 where the text diverges from the edition, we can list:

Rafn] J102.

faðir hans, illa Kára] 'fadir hans uonda kara'.

svâ hausinn brotnaði] 'suo hausin klofnade'.

Hrómundr drap þann] 'hromundur drap hann strax'.

Lbs 2316 4to

Lbs 2316 4to (L2316), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in quarto consisting of i+137 leaves.<sup>146</sup>

146. According to Páll Eggert Ólason, L2316 counts i+272 pages, see Páll Eggert Ólason, Skrá, III:301.

The volume opens with a title page, followed by a table of contents, two short poems, decrees by Pope Gregory the 7th, an essay on printing, and the following sagas: Tristrams saga og Ísoddar, Sigurgardðs saga frækna, Bertrams saga greifa, Flóres saga og Blankiflúr, Friðbjófs saga, 17HsG (ff 87r–95v), and Starkaðar saga gamla, which is defective (the end of the saga is missing).

According to the table of contents on f. 1v, there must have been at least one more leaf, as some stanzas, ‘Fiorar výsur’, were supposed to be written on page 274. The manuscript is kept in an unbound form, with loose quires stored between two boards made of cardboard which are tied together with a cloth strap.

The title page on f. 1r indicates that L2316 was written in 1850 by Elías Sigurðsson from Straumfjarðartunga as it reads:

Þessi Søgu Bök. | Jnniheldur | Siø Flocka. | Uppskrifud arid.
| 1850. | A Straumfia dar, | Tungu, af. | Elias Sigurðs Syni. |
Þeim til gamans er | leingi | vaka á kvöldinn.

This saga book contains seven groups [of sagas] copied in the year 1850 in Straumfjarðartung by Elías Sigurðsson, for the pleasure of those who stay awake long into the evening.

Elías was a bóni in Miklaholtssel and Straumfjarðartung on the Snæfellsnes peninsula. He was married to Halldóra Björnsdóttir, with whom he had a son Kristján (1850–1929), a poet and bóni in Ytra-Lágafell.<sup>147</sup> Not much is known about Elías’s life or his scribal activity, and L2316 is the only known manuscript in his hand.

The orthography of L2316 diverges from that of the edition and is often modernised. Elías regularly implements minor alterations to the saga’s text, including:

Rafn] L2316

Þeir gengu uppá landit] ‘Þeir gerdu so’.

ok fengit jafnan signr] ‘ok feingid ætjð Sigur’.

Þegar Kári hafði fengit sárit] ‘enn sem Kári fiec sárið’.

Rafn] L2316.

‘hann var í stakki gullfáguðum, báðar hendr hans voru breinglaðar’] ‘var hann i stakki gullsuumudum, allur hamns nára bjálki var blár sem hel og hafdi ena feiknarlegustu leingð sem digurð, þjrir stórir hnúðar voru á framann verdri midu hans og var sem sidi gráblá froda ur minni (sic!) hamns, báðar voru hendur hamns breingladar’.

‘hann skyldi fátt tala um fall braeðra sinna; skaltu nú þess gjalda, ok hér lífi missa’] ‘þess gjalda skaltu lifi láta’.

Lbs 2943 4to

Lbs 2943 4to (L2943), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in quarto consisting of 400 leaves gathered in five regular quires of four conjoint leaves each.<sup>148</sup> The manuscript starts with a title page on f. 1r, which reads: ‘Fornmannasögr | Norðurlanda | Tólfta bindi. | Skrifadað eptir gömlum bókum | M.D.C.C.L.X.X.V.’ (Sagas of the ancient men of the north. Twelfth volume. Copied from old books. 1885). On the following page, there is a table of contents, listing eight sagas, mainly riddarasögur, but also one Íslendingasaga and one fornaldarsaga. These are: 17HsG (ff 3r-11v), Karlamagnús saga, Grænlendinga saga, Valdimars saga, Sarpidons saga sterka, Falentíns og Ursins saga, Sálus saga og Nikanórs, Herlaugs saga jarls gauska.

The manuscript was written in 1885 in the hand of the prolific scribe Magnús Jónsson from Tjaldanes in Dalasýsla.<sup>149</sup> Unlike many of Magnús’, manuscripts there is no preface to the texts copied in L2943. The texts were written continuously one after another, as there is no overlap between the quire and text boundaries.

The text 17HsG in L2943 follows the edition relatively closely. The scribe, however, seems to use both the main text of the edition

148. Páll Eggert Ólason, Skrá Auk I, 66–67.

149. On Magnús’s collection of sagas, see Driscoll, ‘Um gildi gamalla bóka: Magnús Jónsson í Tjaldanesi und das Ende der isländischen Handschriftenkultur’; Driscoll, ‘Writing in the Twilight: The Manuscripts of Magnús í Tjaldanesi’.

and the readings from the variant apparatus. In three instances, Magnús chooses the readings from the variant apparatus over the main text:

Rafn] L2943.

gerðist] ‘gerðist þar’.

Halding] ‘Hadding’.

flugu ‘fljúga’

Furthermore, the name of the king of Swedes, Hadding, which consistently appears as ‘Halding’ in the main text of the edition, in L2943 follows the form from the variant apparatus, ‘Hadding’. The choice of ‘Hadding’ over ‘Halding’ might, however, simply be a result of Magnús’ extensive knowledge of old sagas, in which the name Haddingjar appears in various sagas he copied.

The level of scribal intervention into the text of the saga is not consistent throughout the text. In the early chapters, changes are very minor, but as the saga progresses, the variation becomes more significant, particularly in chapter ten, where numerous innovations are introduced to ‘stretch’ the saga, likely to fill the remaining space in the manuscript. This practice has been observed in other manuscripts by Magnús, such as Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra in Lbs 1498 4to and Sörla saga sterka in Lbs 1508 4to.<sup>150</sup> mikill ok sterkr] ÷.

fyrir sverðsins oddi] ‘fyrir oddi sverðs síns’.

Rafn] L2943.

ok lamdi Haldíng konúng í hel] ‘ok lamdi Haldíng kong í hel, ok marga hans menn’.

Karllinn Blindr, er hèt Bavís, var bundinn ok heingðr] ‘Karllinn Blindr, er kallaðr var Bavís, var höndum tekinn bundinn ok heingðr’.

Tóku þeir þar mikit gull ok annat fē] ‘Peir tóku þar mikit herfáng gull ok dýrmæta gripi er Hadding kongr átti’.

The case of 17HsG being copied from a printed edition is not unique in Magnús’ career. There are multiple instances demonstrating that Magnús often based his copies on printed texts, among them: Hrólfss saga kraka in Lbs 1508 4to;<sup>151</sup> Sturlaug saga starfsama in Lbs 1504 4to;<sup>152</sup> Eiríks saga viðförla in Lbs 1505 4to;<sup>153</sup> Mírmanns saga in Lbs 1494 4to and Lbs 1506 4to;<sup>154</sup> Sörla saga sterka in Lbs 4940 4to and Lbs 1508 4to;<sup>155</sup> and Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra in Lbs 1494 4to.<sup>156</sup> Moreover, as Driscoll has observed, Magnús frequently compared the readings from various ‘versions’ of the story available to him, explicitly noting in his commentaries that sometimes he copied the printed text, which in some cases he considered more reliable than the handwritten copies available to him.<sup>157</sup>

The orthography of Magnús’ text closely mirrors that of the edition, but it is difficult to say whether he consciously copied the spelling of the edition or simply used his own highly archaised orthography. Finally, it can be noted that numbers are always written in full in L2943, for example, ‘nýu’ (9), ‘þrjátýgi ok þrjú’ (33), and ‘sextýgi’ (60), while the edition always gives the Arabic numerals.

Lbs 4460 8vo (L4460), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in octavo consisting of i+280+i leaves.<sup>158</sup> L4460 contains fi e fornaldarsögur. These are: Ketils saga hængs, Gríms saga loðinkinna, Örvar-Odds saga, Göngu-Hrólfs saga, and 17HsG (ff 260v–280r), which is followed by a colophon dated to 6 March 1892.

L4460 was written by Þorsteinn Jóhannsson (1875–1958) in the years 1891–1892, as the dated colophons suggest. It is the youngest known manuscript of 17HsG. It is uncertain where exactly the manuscript was copied, but Þorsteinn was associated with a farm called Ólafsey in Snæfellsnessýsla. Þorsteinn's daughter Helga was born in 1913 in Narfeyri in Snæfellsnessýsla, and according to Helga's biography, she lived from 1916 in Reykjavík, where Þorsteinn's youngest child, Ingimundur, was born. Þorsteinn's family probably left Snæfellsnes in 1916, and therefore L4460 had to be written there.<sup>159</sup> The manuscript was donated to the National Library on 14 February 1985 by Helga Þorsteinsdóttir, the aforementioned daughter of the scribe. Not much is known about Þorsteinn's scribal activity, but he was only 17 years old when he copied 17HsG in L4460.

Þorsteinn's text is a fairly close copy of the printed edition, but he does sometimes make stylistic changes and occasionally abridges the text. As with most of the other scribes mentioned here, Þorsteinn consistently updates the orthography of the text but does not introduce any abbreviations. In general, it seems that he sticks fairly closely to the text of the edition, possibly owing to his youth and relative inexperience. Among the minor changes he introduced are, for example:

bindr sér grátt ok sítt geitarskegg ok setr síðan hatt á höfuð sér] ‘bindur sjer grátt ok sítt geitarskegg’, ‘svá hausinn brotnaði’] ‘svo hausinn fór í mola’.

Text-sub-group C

There are only two known manuscripts preserving the texts of 17HsG that are based on Björner's edition:

- AM Acc 61 (Acc61), dated to ca. 1816.
- Ms Germ qu. 936 (M936), dated to ca. 1800–1863.

These two manuscripts are independent copies of the edition (Figure 3.6). The most straightforward method to identify manuscripts based on Björner's edition is through the comparison of variation sites where the readings of the edition disagree with P67, the manuscript on which the edition is based. This enables us to exclude the possibility that these manuscripts are copies of P67, or its descendants, rather than of the edition. As previously mentioned, there are at least two places where Björner misread or misinterpreted P67:

P67] Rafn, Björner.

‘af beiñnum ä lendar ofann] ‘af beinum á lendar ofan’, ‘af beynum a herdar ofann’.

‘Olafur kongur {Austur} ‘Vestur’] ‘Ólafr konúngr austr’, ‘Olafur Kongur vester’.

Especially useful in this context is the reading ‘Olafur Kongur vester’ in Björner's edition, which in P67 reads ‘Olafur kongur {Austur} ‘Vestur’’, with ‘Austur’ being crossed over and ‘Vestur’ written above the line in a different hand. The manuscripts preserving the reading ‘vestur’ are most likely based on Björner’s edition.

To further separate these manuscripts from group A and B, we can use the individual readings of P67 which were also reproduced in Björner’s edition, such as:

P67] Rafn, Björner.

‘of mieg’] ‘þó góðir þikki of mjök’, ‘ofmiog’.

‘og stiack ä qvidin æsar’] ‘ok stakk á kviðinn á sér’, ‘og stack a kvidinn æsar’.

The only manuscripts that reproduce these readings in an unchanged form are Acc61 and M936. These are both very reliable copies of the edition, as to some extent, their orthography and punctuation also follow the edition:

‘af beynum a herdar ofann’] ‘af beynum a herdar ofann’], ‘af beynum a herdar ofann’.

‘CXXXIV’] ‘134’, CXXXIV.

‘og stack a kvidinn æsar’] ‘og stack a kvidin æsar’, ‘og stack a kvidin äser’.

AM Acc 61

AM Acc 61 (Acc61), held in Den Arnamagnæanske Samling in Copenhagen, is a paper manuscript in quarto consisting of 134 leaves. Acc61 contains four fornaldarsögur: Hálfssaga og Hálfss- rekka, 17HsG (ff 18r–29r), Hálfdanar saga Brönumfóstra, and Hrólfssaga kraka, all most likely derived from Björner’s edition.<sup>160</sup>

The manuscript was copied before 1816, as it belongs to the collection of manuscripts which Frederik Julius Schaldemose (1783–1853) gave to the Cathedral school in Nykøbing that year, most of which are in his own hand. The Arnamagnæan received it from the school in April 2007 as a gift.

Schaldemose was a lecturer at the Cathedral School in Nykøbing between 1816 and 1825. He was an active poet, author, and translator, translating various works from Latin, Russian, Spanish, French, German, English, Italian, Swedish, and Dutch into Danish.<sup>161</sup> In 1847, he published a translation of Beowulf and Widsith, with an introduction and commentary. His apparent interest in old stories and legends resulted in the publication of Krønnike-Lises Æventyr, eller Fyenske Sagn in 1844 and Danske Kæmpeviser, ældre og nyere in 1846. Little is known, however, about his scribal activities, or his interest in Old Norse-Icelandic literature. Notably, Icelandic is not even listed among the languages he worked with.<sup>162</sup> Despite this, there are at least nine manuscripts in his hand in the Arnamagnæan. Additionally, I have identified one manuscript in his hand in the National Library of Iceland and one in the Bodleian Library.

Acc61 is an almost unique manuscript in the transmission of 17HsG (alongside M939) due to its conservative treatment of the copied text. The scribe closely follows the text of the edition, even reproducing words spelled in an ‘unusual way’ in the edition, for example, ‘slifast’, ‘munda’, ‘skule’, ‘veþor’, ‘sampt’, ‘vyþa’, ‘broþnade’, ‘Baviz’. He does not introduce any textual variants, and orthographic variants are very limited. He reproduces the punctuation and capitalization of the edition to some extent but is not very consistent. The only consistent change he makes is replacing Roman numerals with Arabic numerals, for example. ‘33 aar’. He does not use abbreviation marks, except for the nasal stroke in ‘hann’.

Ms Germ qu. 936

Ms Germ qu. 936 (M936), held in the Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin – Preußischer Kulturbesitz in Berlin, is a paper manuscript in quarto consisting of i+152+i leaves. The volume begins with a table of contents, followed by Gríms rímur og Hjálmars, Hálfssaga og Hálfssrekka, 17HsG (ff 34r–42v), Hálfdanar saga Brönumfóstra, Sörla saga sterka, Hálfdanar saga Eysteinssonar, and Samsong saga fagra.

The manuscript is written in one hand throughout. The same hand can be found in Ms Germ qu. 935 on pp. 1–129 and 201–313, and in Ms Germ qu. 884 on ff 10r:1–22v:77. According to Degering, all three manuscripts can be associated with the brothers Jacob (1785–1863) and Wilhelm Grimm (1786–1859).<sup>163</sup> Furthermore, Hufnagel suggested that the copying of M936 may have been commissioned by them.<sup>164</sup> Indeed, similar physical features observed across these three manuscripts, such as the type of paper and quire structures, in addition to the scribal hands, suggest shared origins and a close association with Jacob Grimm.

On f. 34r, there is a marginal note in Jacob Grimm's hand, which reads: 'Merkwürdiges Zeugniß | in der Sturlungasaga, | daß die Hromundssaga | schon 1119 bei einem | Gastmal erzählt worden. | vid. Müller | isl. Gesch. schr. | p. 42.' (A peculiar testimony in Sturlunga saga that Hrómunds saga was already told at a feast in 1119, see Müller, Icelandic Historiography, p. 42). This refers to Müller's Über den Ursprung und Verfall der isländischen Historiographie, nebst einem Anhange über die Nationalität der altnordischen Gedichte, in which he mentioned that HsG was recited at the wedding feast at Reykhólar.<sup>165</sup> Consequently, the marginal note must post-date 1813, but more importantly, it exemplifies Jacob Grimm's interest, shared by many of his early nineteenth century contemporaries, in the inter-textual relationships among the sagas and their medieval origins.

165. Müller, Über den Ursprung und Verfall der isländischen Historiographie, nebst einem Anhange über die Nationalität der altnordischen Gedichte, 42–43.

As such, there is no doubt that the text of 17HsG in M936 derives from Björner's edition. It reproduces the errors 'herdar' and 'vestur', but also the peculiar orthography of Björner's edition, for example: 'sliofast', 'veþor', 'sampt', 'vyþa', 'broþnade', 'Baviz'. The text is very conservative and the only changes that the scribe introduces are purely graphemic, such as the use of 'ä' for 'æ' and 'ß' for 'ss'. The same feature has been observed by Hufnagel in her study of Sörla saga sterka manuscripts.<sup>166</sup> Unlike the case of Sörla saga sterka, however, the scribe copies the numerals as they are presented in the edition, in their Roman representation, e.g. 'VIII edur XII'.

It is worth noting that these three manuscripts together (M936, Ms Germ qu. 935, and Ms Germ qu. 884) contain an almost complete collection of the sagas included in Björner's Nordiska Kämpa Datter. The organization of texts in the manuscripts follows the order in which they appear in Björner's edition. The only two texts, however, that are missing are Friðþjófs saga and Frá Fornjóti og hans ættmönnum. A random sample check of various texts preserved in these manuscripts has led me to believe that all these texts reproduce the edition very reliably; even the chapter headings preserve the orthography and punctuation of the edition.

Manuscript context in A<sub>3</sub> and C

The manuscripts in text-sub-group A<sub>3</sub> and text-group C provide informative insights into different approaches not only to copying but also to organising manuscript volumes. Texts of seven different works appear alongside 17HsG in text-group C. All these texts, six sagas and one set of rímur, had been published in Björner's edition. Only two sagas appear in both Acc61 and M967: Hálfdanar saga Brönuþóstra and Hálfs saga og Hálfsrekka. In both manuscripts, the sagas appear in the same order in which they were printed in the edition: first Hálfs saga og Hálfsrekka, then 17HsG, followed by Hálfdanar saga Brönuþóstra. Until textual evidence proves otherwise, it is safe to assume that these two sagas were also copied from the edition, just like 17HsG.

Only one of them, however, appears twice: Friðþjófs saga. Other texts include various riddarasögur, such as Flóres saga og Blankiflúr and Karlamagnús saga; Íslendingasögur, such as Hrafnkels saga Freysgoða and Bjarnar saga Hítdælakappa; and rímur, such as Jóhönnuraunir. Thus, not only do the sagas published in Rafn's edition co-occur with 17HsG in this text-sub-group. The literary contents of these manuscripts are very broad and difficult to classify in any consistent way. It seems that each single manuscript had its own individual rationale that requires further and more detailed analysis.

The nineteenth-century saga

Previous chapters illustrated the transmission history of the seventeenth-century saga of Hrómundur, placing its origins in the antiquarian networks of early modern Denmark and Sweden. Subsequently, the prose saga travelled back to Iceland, where it circulated in diverse literary circles including wealthy landowners, lay scholars, farmers, and fishermen. At the same time, the manuscripts of the saga spread beyond Scandinavia, reaching the United Kingdom and Germany, where interest in medieval Old Norse-Icelandic stories was growing. Some decades after the 1737 publication of Nordiska kämpa dater, in which an edition and Swedish and Latin translations of 17HsG appeared, a summary of the story in Danish was published by Peter Erasmus Müller, followed by a full translation and edition by Carl Christian Rafn.<sup>1</sup> While scholars in Europe were interested in the medieval origins of the saga, in Iceland the story entered the usual cycle of literary adaptation, moving freely between prose and verse.<sup>2</sup> At the beginning of the nineteenth century, the story of Hrómundur obtained a new narrative form. The existence of this younger Hrómundar saga Greipssonar (19HsG) has escaped the attention of scholars until quite recently, when introductory studies on the matter have been published.<sup>3</sup>

3. The present chapter presents some material that has previously been published in Kapitan, ‘Afterlife of a Lost Saga: A Hitherto Unknown Adaptation of the Lost Saga of Hrómundur Gripsson’.

The new saga of Hrómundur appears to be a product of the literary activity of Icelandic lay scholars of the early nineteenth century, henceforth 19HsG. It is preserved in four nineteenth-century manuscripts, which are discussed in detail at the end of this chapter. The text of 19HsG is four times longer than the seventeenth-century saga (17HsG). Its length is achieved through the addition of episodes and motifs, as well as numerous rhetorical amplifications, which change the stylistic impression of the saga. While 17HsG is episodic and short of descriptive passages, 19HsG has a strong narrative thread with elaborate descriptions of events and characters. The differences between the content and style of these two sagas are so significant that they should be seen as two distinct adaptations of the same material, rather than versions of the same work, and are treated as such in the present study.

The differences between 17HsG and 19HsG are quite clear from the beginning of the text. The seventeenth-century saga, as preserved in the oldest manuscript, AM 601 b 4to (A601), starts as follows:

(S)á kongr rieþe fyrir †Gordom† ‘í danmorc†’ er Olafur hiet, hann var sonr Gnóðar Asmundar, hann var frøgr maþr. Brøþr ij. kári oc ørnulfr, voru landvarnar menn kongz, hermann
mikler (A601, f. 1r)

(A king ruled over Garðir in Denmark, who was called Ólafur. He was the son of Gnóðar-Asmundur. He was a famous man. Two brothers, Kári and Örnúlfur, were king's land-wardens; great warriors.)

Meanwhile, the 19HsG is much more verbose and begins in the following way in London, British Library Add. MS 11109 (B11109), which is also the base text of our edition:

Sva hefr Søgo þessa, at á þeim tímum sem margir Stólkongar voro í Norvegi, Danmorco oc Svíþjóþ, gjörþost margir Höfþíngjar oc stormektugir Herrar, Greifar oc Jarlar, sem bruto sic til ricja oc landa, herjuþo sva vel á vetrom sem sumrom, oc óbluþo sér sva fjá oc frægþa A medal þessara oc þvílikra var einn micils verþr Kóngr, sem Olafr hiet, hann var ólatasti til bardaga, ör af fé vit vini sína, enn strangr oc hefnigjarn vit Ovini; hann rac af ricjom marga Konga oc höfþíngja, oc hafþi vetrseto í Norvegi, sérdeilis á Háloga landi, þar sat Kóngr optast. Kóngr átti ij systr, sem framm téco óllom óþrom meyom, at kostom oc qvennþrþi, hyggindom sem handvirþom, á mil-lum Vícr oc Hálogalands, hiet ónnr Dagný en ónnr Svanhvít (B11109, f. 106v)

(So begins this saga, that at that time when there were many petty kings in Norway, Denmark and Sweden, many became chieftains and powerful lords, counts and earls, who gained power and land, constantly carried on wars regardless of season, and gained for themselves wealth and fame. Among these and similar men there was one important king who was named Ólafur; he was most eager for battles, generous towards his friends but harsh and vengeful towards his enemies. He drove many kings and chieftains away from their countries and had his winter sojourn in Norway, especially in Hálogaland, where the king was most often. The king had two sisters who surpassed all other women between Vík and Hálogaland in quality and beauty, intelligence and skilfulness; one was called Dagný and the other Svanhvít.)

By comparing these opening paragraphs, we see not only the significant amount of rhetorical amplification in 19HsG, but also a different structure, and the addition of new information. 19HsG first provides a lengthy introduction to the political situation of medieval Scandinavia, then we learn about King Ólafur's characteristics and his origins in Norway, and finally we are told the names of his sisters. The beginning of 17HsG is far more laconic and closely follows the structure of the medieval rímur of Hrómundur, in which King Ólafur is introduced first and his two retainers immediately afterwards.

Despite the extensive amplifications in 19HsG, it is still possible to demonstrate that the materials originating from both Griplur and 17HsG are present in 19HsG. As discussed elsewhere, the saga-writer seems to have consciously used both sources and in some cases provided additional details originating from Griplur which are omitted in 17HsG. In other cases, they chose to follow 17HsG against the rímur.<sup>4</sup>

This chapter serves as an introduction to this new saga of Hrómundur. It casts light on different aspects of the saga's style and transmission, allowing us to place it in the broader context of Icelandic literary production and consumption. We start with a brief plot summary of 19HsG foregrounding some of the elements of the story unknown from 17HsG. This is followed by a discussion of selected motifs and innovations introduced into the story, identifying some parallels within the Old Norse literary corpus. Next, we turn to the language of the saga and its possible origins. The chapter concludes with a section focused on the saga's production by describing the manuscripts that preserve it, revealing the textual relationships among them, and analysing the literary context in which the saga appears.

4.1 Plot summary

The younger saga of Hrómundur, 19HsG counts around 12.000 words (about four times the length of 17HsG) and is divided into twenty-one chapters.<sup>5</sup> In one of the manuscripts preserving the saga, Reykjavík, Landsbókasafn, Lbs 679 4to (L679), each chapter is given a distinct heading, or title. While these chapter headings do not appear in other manuscripts, they offer insights into the principal events occurring within each chapter. They are presented here for the reader's convenience.

20. ‘Hromundr Vinnr Haldán Kong’
21. ‘Blindr Heingdr Hromundr giptist Svanhvít’

What is worth noting here is that from these chapter headings alone, it would be impossible to conclude that there are any additional episodes in the 19HsG which are not present in 17HsG. Therefore, these additional elements are foregrounded in the brief summary below.

The story begins by introducing Ólafur and his court and then Greipur and his family. Ólafur, king of Norway, dwells mainly in Hálogaland and has two beautiful sisters, Svanhvít and Dagný. There are two deceitful retainers in Ólafur’s army, Bildur and Vóli, who are greatly valued by the king. Greipur lives nearby and is married to Gunnlaug, or Vallaug, daughter of Hrókur the Black. They have nine sons and Hrómundur is the oldest and most promising of the brothers.

Hrómundur emerges as a hero with remarkable combat skills during Ólafur’s raiding journey to Sweden, which led to a great battle in which Hrómundur avenges his foster-brother Kári’s death by defeating Hröngviður. Following this, Hrómundur undertakes a quest to retrieve treasures from Práinn’s burial mound, confronting and overcoming Práinn. This brought him enormous fame and excessive wealth for Ólafur and his companions.

The saga intricately weaves in elements of chivalric romance and adventure tale, as Hrómundur’s journey is filled with hunting trips, prophetic dreams, and supernatural encounters. After a successful hunting trip led by Ólafur, during which Hrómundur's dog, Hrókur, plays a significant role, Vóli and Bildur kill the dog out of jealousy. Hrómundur keeps the incident to himself and abstains from joining the next hunting trip. Ólafur is led to believe Hrómundur's absence is due to him spending time with his sister, Svanhvít, which does not please the king. Tensions escalate when Ólafur decides to confront his sister and Hrómundur. A plan is hastily devised by Svanhvít to disguise Hrómundur with magical assistance, enabling him to evade Ólafur's wrath. She takes a yellow stone and passes it over Hrómundur's face to change his appearance into that of a servant woman. When Ólafur cannot find Hrómundur, he vents his anger on Svanhvít, slapping her face and calling her names. Meanwhile, Hrómundur finds his brothers and they set off to stay with Greipur, their father who welcomes them warmly.

Now the story turns to Sweden where Kings Hálfðans collect their army and send envoys to King Ólafur to summon him to a battle on the frozen lake Vænir. Despite Ólafur's regret over the absence of Hrómundur and his brothers, the battle proceeds with the Swedish army, aided by Helgi, the brother of Hröngviður, and his shape-shifting mistress Kára. This leads to significant losses for Ólafur, including the death of Bildur, one of the evil brothers.

Following the heavy casualties, Ólafur seeks reinforcements from Norway. Hrómundur, initially hesitant to follow the king due to past grievances, is eventually convinced by Svanhvít to aid him in the battle. He sets off armed with a protective shield and a garter for enhanced prowess that he received from Svanhvít. Upon his arrival, Hrómundur sets his tent on the other side of the lake with the intention of joining the combat, but, following some bad dreams he had the previous night, he decides to abstain from joining the battle that day. His brothers, however, decide to go and they are all slain by Helgi, assisted by his mistress Kára. The death of his brothers at the hands of Helgi and Kára compels Hrómundur to enter the battle, where he avenges their deaths by killing Helgi.

The saga takes a dramatic turn when Hrómundur encounters Vóli on the ice, leading to a fierce confrontation that results in Vóli's death but also great injuries to Hrómundur and the loss of his sword, Mistilteinn, into the lake's depths. Reflecting on the battle's aftermath, Hrómundur mourns the loss of his brothers and the sword, regretting not heeding Svanhvít's advice. Near death from wounds and cold, Hrómundur is rescued by Hagall, accompanied by Svanhvít and her sister Dagný. Hagall and his wife Haddís nurse Hrómundur back to health. During his recovery, Hagall retrieves Hrómundur's lost sword, Mistilteinn, finding it inside a large fish. As Hrómundur's health improves, a threat looms again when one of Hálfdan's men, Blindur, determined to capture him, arrives at Hagall's home and wants to search it for Hrómundur. Through clever deception and the quick thinking of Haddís, Hrómundur evades capture by disguising himself first as a servant girl and a shepherd, fooling Blindur and his search party with each attempt.

In the concluding part of the saga, Blindur, after experiencing ominous dreams, approaches King Hálfdan for interpretations which hint at impending doom for both. Meanwhile, Hrómundur, having recovered, informs his father about the loss of his brothers, aligning with previous prophetic dreams. Despite a peace agreement, Ólafur aims to confront Hálfdan once more but faces reluctance from Hrómundur to rejoin his forces due to past grievances. Svanhvít convinces Hrómundur again to support Ólafur, this time under the condition of their marriage after the campaign. Together, they launch a surprise attack on Hálfdan in Uppsala, resulting in Hálfdan's death and paving the way for Hrómundur and Svanhvít's wedding. The saga concludes with the execution of Blindur, and the union of Hrómundur and Svanhvít in a grand celebration, leading to a prosperous life and a lineage that includes Ingólfur, the legendary first settler of Iceland.

4.2 Additions

For a reader familiar with 17HsG it will be clear from the plot summary above that there is a number of additional motifs that appear in 19HsG, which are completely absent from 17HsG. These additions include not only whole new episodes, the sources of which remain largely unknown, but also repetitions of similar scenes or motifs known from the older saga in a different context, as well as occasional incorporation of additional materials from Griplur.

There are simply too many such instances to list and discuss them here at large, but to give the reader a general impression of different types of changes appearing in the saga, we focus on a selected cases representing each type of an addition. We start with the additions derived from Gripur, represented by the killing of Hrókur, which proves the relationship between 19HsG and the medieval rímur.<sup>8</sup> Then we move to the repeating motifs derived from 17HsG, represented by the presence of prophetic dreams and the use of disguise to escape danger. Finally, we close this section with the episodes derived from outside the Hrómundar saga tradition, represented here by the yawning of Haddís, the appearance of Hagall as a flyin dragon, and the violence against Svanhvít.

Hrókur

A clear evidence for the influence of Gripur on 19HsG can be found in chapter seven of the saga, in which Hrómundur's dog, Hrókur, is killed by the evil brothers, Bildur and Vóli. As noted in previous scholarship, some misunderstanding occurred in 17HsG, which led to Hrókur being a man in the saga, while in the rímur he was a dog.<sup>9</sup> 19HsG does not reproduce the misunderstanding of 17HsG, but instead follows the tradition derived from the rímur. In the 19HsG we read:

þar hafþi Kóngr vetrseto með hyrþ sína, þann vetr, hjá Burgeis nockrom, hann var Gnúði kallaþr, hann gaf Kóngi marg a góþa gripi oc sva mónnom hans; hann gaf Hrómundi einn racka, sem var sva vel viti borinn, sem maþr, oc skjótr sem ór, oc hit mesta gersemi var hann, sá var Hrókr kallaþr (B11109, f. 114v).

(There the king with his army had a winter sojourn with a certain burgess, who was called Gnúði [and who] gave the king and his men many great gifts. He gave Hrómundur a certain dog, which was as intelligent as a man, and as fast as an arrow.)

8. Other examples illustrating the dependence of 19HsG on Gripur can be found in Kapitan, 'Hrómundur in Prose and Verse'.

9. Andrews, 'Studies in the Fornaldarsögur Norðrlanda (Continued)'; Jesch, 'Hrómundr Gripsson Revisited'.

Even though 19HsG presents Hrókur as a dog, there are some discrepancies between Griplur and the saga when it comes to the value of the dog. In Griplur stanza IV:5, Hrómundur gives a man named Grundi, from whom he received the dog, a golden ring which weighs one mark, ‘eyrir vegr og aðra sjau’.<sup>10</sup> In 19HsG the golden ring weighs two marks of silver, ‘vög vit ij mercr sylfors’ (B11109, f. 114v). This may be the result of a misunderstanding of the rímur, indicating that the poetic language might have been equally difficult to understand for the scribes in the seventeenth and nineteenth century. After all, in the 17HsG the weight of a ring that Hrómundur gives to the man named Hrókur equals to only one ounce ‘Hann gaf einum manni, þeim er Hrókur hiet eitt sinn, gullhring góðann er vó eýri’ (A601, f. 3r).

Prophetic dreams

Recurring in 17HsG and 19HsG is the motif of Bad dreams as an evil omen (D1812.5.1.2).<sup>11</sup> In 17HsG there are two episodes that utilise this motif. In the first one, Hrómundur does not join the battle because of the bad dream he had the previous night (see p. 240). In the second one, Blindur narrates multiple of his dreams to the king of the Swedes who consistently misinterprets them (see p. 244). In the first case, the reader does not know the contents of the dream, because Hrómundur only announces that he will not participate in the battle because of the bad dream he had, without giving an account of it. In the second case, there are detailed descriptions of the dreams, followed by the king’s interpretations. The schematic presentation of the dreams and their interpretations one after another strengthens the impression that the king is misinterpreting the dreams, which in fact refer to his future.

In 19HsG, the occurrences of this motif have been doubled in relation to 17HsG, as they appear in four independent episodes. First, Hrómundur’s father, Greipur, summons Hrómundur to visit him. Greipur tells Hrómundur about his bad dream, specifying its contents and, to a certain extent, providing his own interpretation

Nú hef ec sagt þér draum minn, en þú mant rápa verþa með tilþinni. Hrómundr svarar: bæpi er þat, at draumurinn þykir ecki svá merkilegr, enda erto oc maðr orþinn gamall. Satt er þat segir Greipr at ec er gamall vorþinn, en víst man draumurinn eitthvað merkja, því mér félst hugr um hríngana, oc þat vildða ec, Frændl! at þú talabir vit þær systr Ólaf's Kóngs, oc manto þeirra njóta, en Bíld oc Vóla skalto varast því þeir ero ótrúir fl yrstrom oc segja Kóngi satt oc logit af óþrom mónnom. (B11109, f. 115v)

(Now I have told you my dream, and you will have to interpret it later. Hrómundur answers: For one thing, the dream does not seem important, and for another, you have become an old man. It is true, says Greipur, that I have become old, but certainly the dream must mean something, because I thought about the rings, and this I want, my kinsman, that you talk to the sisters of King Ólafur and enjoy their company, but you must avoid Bíldur and Vóli because they are treacherous towards most people and tell the king truth and lies about other men.)

Even though Hrómundur initially dismisses the importance of the dream, he visits Svanhvít and asks her to interpret his father's dream. She advises him to stay away from King Ólafur because he is under the influence of the treacherous brothers Bíldur and Vóli. Greipur's dream foreshadows the events described in the following chapter, when Hrómundur is forced to flee from Ólafur's court due to the slander of Bíldur and Vóli.

The next dream in 19HsG serves a similar purpose. This time, it is Svanhvít who tells Hrómundur about her bad dream (see p. 285). She does not offer any interpretation of her dream, but its significance seems clear to both her and Hrómundur, as the saga presents it in the following way:

þat dreymdi mic eitt sinn, at ec þóktist búa um þic í eino rúmi, oc varsto lítt haldinn, en þó mæltir þú til míni, en bræþrom þínom bjó ec annat rúm, oc tóluþo þeir ecki neitt til míni. Máské svá verþi segir Hrómundr oc tóð fíngorgull oc gaf henni, oc géck burt síðan, en hún bat hann vel fara (B11109, f. 116r).

(I dreamed once, that it seemed to me I attended to you in one bed, and you were in a bad condition, but you spoke to me, but for your brothers I prepared another bed and they did not talk to me at all. Maybe it will be this way, said Hrómundur, and took a ring and gave it to her, and afterwards left, and she bade him farewell.)

Unlike in the previous episode, in this scene there is a certain understanding between Hrómundur and Svanhvít about the importance and meaning of this dream. By saying ‘Maybe it will be this way’, Hrómundur expresses his understanding of the dream’s meaning and acknowledges the possibility of its coming true, but at the same time hr implies that he is not going to actively avoid his fate. The dream presenting Hrómundur’s speechless brothers and the severely ill Hrómundur prepares the reader for the outcome of the forthcoming battle, in which Hrómundur is gravely wounded and all of his eight brothers fall.

Before the battle, Hrómundur himself has a bad dream, which makes him stay in his tent and not go to fight. This scene closely resembles the corresponding scene in 17HsG, where Hrómundur only announces that he has had a bad dream and will not participate in the battle, but we do not know the contents of the dream:

hann leggr sic til svefnis, oc lætr illa í svefn; at morgni vaknar hann, oc blæs mæþilega; þeir braðr spyrja hann eptir draumom sínom, en hann quæfst engom segja oc man ek ei út fara á þessom degi, segir hann, þótt aþrir fari (B11109, f. 120v).

(He goes to sleep and sleeps badly. The next morning, he wakes up and breathes heavily. His brothers ask him about his dreams, but he says he won’t tell anyone, and I won’t go out today, he says, even if others go.)

The motif of prophetic dreams is very common in Old Norse literature across various genres, from Íslendingasögur to konungasögur and fornaldarsögur, but one of the examples closest to Hrómundur’s prophetic dream can be found in chapter 12 of Porsteins saga Vikingssonar, a legendary saga and prequel to Friðþjófs saga.<sup>12</sup> A significant difference between these two narratives is, however, that Porsteinn actually describes his dream and provides an interpretation of it, while in both 17HsG and 19HsG we have to find out later that the dream was related to the death of Hrómundur's brothers in the battle.

The last occurrence of the motif of bad dreams as an evil omen in 19HsG is the sequence of Blindur's dreams, which predicts the near death of King Hálfðan. In chapter 17, Blindur gives the king an account of his prophetic dreams, but the king misinterprets them all, just as in 17HsG. The sequence of dreams is not identical to that in 17HsG. Among the innovations in 19HsG there is an additional dream, which is presented as follows:

oc þar eptir sá ec yþar betsta drecaskip, mara í miþjo kafí í brimi oc sjóaræpi gangi, en allr herinn yþar stóþ hófotlaus niþr í eino vatni (B11109, f. 127v).

and in the rage of the sea, and your entire army stood headless below in the water.)

While there is no corresponding dream of a headless army in 17HsG, Griplur appears to be the most likely source. There, in stanza 25 of the sixth ríma, we can read: 'Dreki þinn leiz mér færðr á flóð / flau í báru miðri,/ hófuðlaus allur herrinn stóð / í heitu vatni niðri' (Your ship appeared to me in the open waters, it floated in the middle of a wave, in the burning water below all your headless army stood).<sup>13</sup>

Disguise

Another recurring motif that appears in 19HsG and is also found in 17HsG is that of Disguise of man in a woman's dress (K1836), which is widely known beyond Iceland in the literary traditions of, for instance, Italy, Ireland and India.<sup>14</sup>

In 17HsG, Hrómundur hides at Hagall's house disguised as a woman grinding corn while Blindur searches the house at the request of King Haldíng (see p. 243). The same motif appears in Helgakviða Hundingsbana II, where Helgi, disguised as a servant girl grinding corn, hides at Hagall's place while Blindur looks for him following the orders of King Hundingr.<sup>15</sup> It has been observed in the scholarship that the close similarities between these two scenes suggest that the account of Griplur (and secondarily also 17HsG) has been modelled on Helgakviða.<sup>16</sup> This specific motif has been called Man in danger of life dressed by hostess as woman and set to grinding corn (K521.4.1.3).<sup>17</sup>

The same motif appears in chapter 16 of 19HsG, where the disguise helps Hrómundur to avoid Blindur (see p. 305). Here it is not certain, however, whether Hrómundur is set to grinding corn or stirring porridge:

Pá segir kerling vit Hrómund nú skalto fara í fót Eldabusko minnar, oc skalto hræra graut til matgjörþar, fékk hún honom þá Mistiltein fyrir grautar þvóro, oc mælir með þvórunni má verjast ef á liggr. Litlo síþar qvomo menn Kóngs, oc sógbust vilja betr leita, en fyrr. Hagall segir þeim heimila ransókun, leita þeir nú lengi, oc fi na ecki Hrómund at heldr; sáo þeir nú Eldabuskuna, at hún dró til Möndulinna, oc leit óhýrt til Kóngs manna (B11109, f. 126r).

(Then says the woman to Hrómundur: Now you must put on my kitchen maid's clothes, and you must stir porridge for cooking. She then gave him Mistilteinn as a ladle and says: You can defend yourself with the ladle if necessary. Shortly afterwards the king's men came and said that they wanted to search better than before. Hagall says that the house is open to investigation and now they search for a long time and still don't find Hrómundur. Now they saw that the kitchen maid was drawing the handle of the quern and looking belligerently towards them.)

It is worth noting that 19HsG had already used the same motif of a man's disguise as a woman earlier in the saga; in one of the additional episodes, which includes an extended description of Vóli's and Bildur's attempts to discredit Hrómundur for King Ólafur. Ólafur is informed by the evil brothers about the frequent visits that Hrómundur pays to his sister Svanhvít and decides to go to Svanhvít's house and confront Hrómundur there. When Svanhvít learns about the imminent arrival of her brother, she hurries to get Hrómundur safely out of her house (see p. 286).

Svanhvít géck at Hrómundi oc mælir nú mátto ecki tefja því Bróþir minn kémr innan lítils tíma oc vill fanga þic, skalto taca vit qvenn-skrúpa vorum, oc mæta Kóngi vit gjættir, oc ber sængr fót oc hvílo voþir í fangi þér, [...] síþan tóc Svanhvít ljósgulann Stein, oc dró um andlit hans, féck hann þá yfirlit hennar þjónosto meyar (B11109, f. 116v).

(Svanhvít went to Hrómundur and says: You cannot stay here any longer, because my brother will be arriving here soon and he will capture you. You shall take my female clothing and meet the king by the gate, and you shall carry bedlinen and blankets in your arms. [...] Then Svanhvít took a bright-yellow stone and moved it over his face, which gave him the appearance of her servant girl.)

This scene is neither a direct reuse of the corn-grinding scene nor a simple replication of the man in woman's dress motif, since the element of changing clothes is here expanded by a magical (?) transformation of Hrómundur's appearance. The use of the stone in this scene is significant, as it might be considered evidence for the generic fluidity of 19HsG, which builds on traditional legendary saga material, but also freely draws literary inspiration from riddarasögur.

Magic stones appear in various translated and indigenous riddarasögur where, among other functions, they can be used for transformation (D572.5 Transformation by means of magic stone) or give invisibility (D1361.2 Magic stone gives invisibility). Possibly the closest analogue to the example from 19HsG can be found in Gibbons saga, an Icelandic romance dated to the fourteenth century, in which magic stones appear several times in various functions. For example, Greka passes a magic stone over Gibbon's head to remove his sexual desire and Florentina passes a red stone over Gibbon's head to foresee the future. In particular, a yellow stone is used by a dwarf named Kollur to change Gibbon's appearance when he is about to enter the chambers of Florentina with the intention of raping her.

In 19HsG Svanhvít gains the magical ability to change Hrómundur's appearance by passing a stone over his head, a quality she lacks in 17HsG. Consequently, she seems to play a similar secondary role in the narrative as the dwarfs and exotic princesses encountered in some of the riddarasögur. However, the use of magic in itself is not always limited to secondary characters in saga narratives. In Nítíða saga, for example, another Icelandic romance also dated to the fourteenth century, a magic stone is used by the main character, Queen Nítíða. In order to protect herself, Nítíða uses the magic stone to change the appearance of her servant woman, so that the latter is kidnapped instead of the queen.<sup>18</sup>

Finally, the motif of disguise appears again in chapter 16, which describes Blindur's search of Hagall's house. It is worth recalling that in 17HsG Blindur's house is examined only twice. In the first attempt Hrómundur is hidden under a pot (see p. 243), and in the second one Hrómundur is grinding corn disguised as a woman (see p. 243). 19HsG describes four attempts to find Hrómundur. First, he is hidden under a pot, next he is set to grinding corn (or stirring porridge) disguised as a woman, and the third time he is disguised as a shepherd who is asked by Haddís to go and collect the sheep. While in disguise, Hrómundur meets Blindur, who fails to recognise him, and in this way Hrómundur again avoids being captured. This is the motif of Disguise as herdsman (K1816.6), but I have been unable to find a scene in the Old Norse literary corpus that closely resembles the scene in 19HsG. In Víga-Glúms saga, this motif is used in the scene in which Skúta pretends to be looking for his sheep to avoid Glúmur's men. At the same time, this scene is quite different in its structure. Whereas in 19HsG it is Haddís who gives Hrómundur clear instructions about how to behave, in Víga-Glúms saga the disguise is Skúta's own initiative.<sup>19</sup>

Flying dragon

While the change of Hrómundur's appearance by the use of a magic stone can already be treated as an additional motif introduced in 19HsG, whose sources lie outside the 17HsG tradition, the last attempt of finding Hrómundur by Blindur in 19HsG is an even more straightforward case. The last of Blindur's attempts fails not

gengr nú Hagall á móti þeim at garþi út, en er þeir sáu hann varþ hann undarlegr í augom þeirra, sýndist þeim þá, at Flugdreci sækja at þeim, tóco þeir þá at leita aprí til baka, oc snúa heim leiþis, en Draconinn sókti eptir þeim af meirsta kappi, sýndist þeim hann blása eldi oc eytri, villoð þá sumir bíþa hans, en sumir forþa sér, varþ þat þá fl yrstom fyrir at leita sér undan færslu, varaþi þessi adsókn framm at qvöldi (B11109, f. 126v–127r)

(Now Hagall goes against them out to the yard, and when they saw him, he appeared somewhat strange in their eyes. It seemed to them then, that a flyin dragon was hunting them. They started to run away and head back towards home, but the dragon followed them with great eagerness, and it seemed to them as if he was blowing fi e and venom. Then some of them wanted to wait for him, but others wanted to escape, and it came to this that most of them decided to fl e. The haunting continued until evening.)

Neither 17HsG nor Griplur assigns any supernatural abilities to the cottager Hagall, besides his surprising luck in catching a fis that had earlier swallowed Hrómundur's sword. In 19HsG, we witness the saga-writer again drawing from the stock imagery of Old Norse literature, but using it in slightly diff rent contexts from those we are used to.

When flyin dragons appear in the Old Norse literary corpus, they are usually supposed to be slain by great heroes.<sup>20</sup> In 19HsG, the dragon seems to be an illusion that is somehow generated by Hagall in order to scare the enemies. They do not engage in a figh but simply run away, perhaps emphasising their inferiority to other, more courageous saga characters. The appearance of the dragon in 19HsG clearly draws on romance imagery: the dragon is not only flyin but also spitting venom and fi e, features present in some riddarasögur, for example, Tristrams saga og Ísöndar and Ívens saga.

Yawning

Another scene of 19HsG, absent from both 17HsG and Griplur, is the episode when, while Hrómundur is being healed at Hagall and Haddís's cottage, Haddís cannot speak one day owing to the great yawning that suddenly falls upon her. As the saga tells us:

Nockro eptir þetta, þegar Hrómundr tóð at verþa gróinn sára sinna, sképi þat: kerlíng tóð til at fá sva stóra geispa, at hún quom varla framm orþi fyrr þeim (B1109, f. 125v).

(Sometime after this, when Hrómundur was being healed of his wounds, this happens: the woman [Haddís] started to yawn so much that she could barely say a word.)

The yawning occurs when Haddís predicts that Blindur is going to reveal Hrómundur's identity and whereabouts to King Hálfdan, which later results in Blindur searching for Hrómundur. Haddís, like many other female saga characters, must possess some supernatural ability to foresee the future, and the act of yawning must be related to this ability. The knowledge of the upcoming danger suddenly falls upon her in the form of the yawning fit. It has been suggested that yawning in Old Norse literature represents inhaling spirits, which provide information about, for example, upcoming danger.<sup>21</sup>

While it is difficult to identify with certainty the sources of this motif in 19HsG, yawning appears in various genres of Icelandic literature. In Hrólf's saga kraka, one of the most famous legendary sagas, there is a scene in which Heiður, a völva, yawns greatly before involuntarily delivering a prophecy regarding the whereabouts of two boys that the evil king attempts to find.<sup>22</sup> In Njáls saga, probably the best-known saga of Icelanders, yawning appears in the scene where Svanur senses that Ósvífur is about to attack and announces it while yawning greatly.<sup>23</sup> In both cases, yawning is related to some knowledge which can be mediated only through the yawning person. As Quinn observed in her study of Eddic prophecies in the legendary sagas, it is usually female characters that have access to this sort of passive knowledge, which is supposed to be communicated to the main hero and advance his adventures. In 19HsG, Haddís warns Hrómundur to prepare himself for the visit from Blindur, but the hero does not take any action, and it is again her role to help him escape.

Violence

Finally, it is worth to mention here that some of the less noticeable changes made to the text are quite intriguing, as they might, to some extent, reflect changes in Icelandic mentality in the pre-modern period. A good example is the episode in which Ólafur confronts Svanhvít about her relationships with Hrómundur. In chapter 3 of 17HsG this episode is presented as follows:

kong(r) suarar heýrt hefi ek getiþ hann mvnþi fifla þik, oc skal suerþip skilia ýckar ást. Lýtt manstu nú sagde hun, þegar hann eirn gieck i hauginn, enn eingi annar þorþi, oc fi man voli og bylþr heingþir verþa sagde hon Geck sýþann snvþuckt i brot (A601, f. 3v).

(The king answers: I have heard that he [Hrómundur] might deceive you, and the sword shall separate your love. You remember little now, she said, when he alone went into the mound, while no one else dared, and sooner will Vóli and Bildur be hanged, she said and walked quickly away.)

The same scene is described as follows in chapter 9 of 19HsG:

Kóngr mælir fyrir mic er qvomit, sem satt man, at Hrómundr fipl þic, oc því held ec þat líklegast, at þú haldir svari hans. Svanhvít mælir mansto ecki þat, at hvorki þú sjálf, eþr nockor annar þinna manna þorþi at fara í haug Þráins nema Hrómundr einn. [4 sentences skipped, see p. 287] Þá reiþdist Olafur Kóngr oc sló Svanhvít sva stort andlits blak, at blóþit féll of hana oc mælir haf þetta fyrir Hrómund þín armadubba oc skalto jafnan hafa reiþi mína. Svanhvít mælir allt of þat oc ei at síþr skal ec þá Hrómund vit vara oc betst unna, en þar á móti til leggja at vinir þínir Vole oc Bíldr verþi hengþir. (B11109, f. 117r)

(The king says: It has come to my attention, and it must be true, that Hrómundur deceives you, and therefore I find it most likely that you shall defend him. Svanhvít says: Don't you remember that neither you yourself, nor any of your men dared to enter Þráinn's mound except for Hrómundur alone? [4 sentences skipped, see p. 287] Then King Ólafur became angry and struck Svanhvít so hard in the face that blood fell over her and said: take this for Hrómundur, you wretched woman, and you shall always have my anger. Svanhvít speaks: Despite all that, I shall still warn Hrómundur and love him best, and instead your friends Vóli and Bildur will be hanged.)

While in 17HsG they simply agree to disagree and go their separate ways, in 19HsG Ólafur slaps Svanhvít in her face for disobedience. Furthermore, and quite surprisingly, this malicious act does not have any bad consequences for the king, other than Hrómundur being initially reluctant to aid him in battle against the Swedes because of his behaviour towards Svanhvít (chapter 12). Svanhvít, even though at first offend, stays loyal to her brother. When she learns that Ólafur is about to lose the battle, she takes his side and convinces Hrómundur to support him. This stands in striking contrast to some sagas of Icelanders, where a man slapping a woman in the face is taken as a great offence and brings bad luck to the man. Some classic examples of that can be found, for example, in Laxdæla saga and Njáls saga.<sup>24</sup> In 19HsG this act does not have any meaningful consequences for the offender.

It has been previously suggested that a close examination of textual variants appearing in the younger 'versions' of the sagas can be a useful source for the study of changing mentalities in pre-modern Iceland.<sup>25</sup> There is thus some potential in the comparative analysis of cases such as 19HsG in further developing our understanding of the relationship between early modern society and literature. To successfully make an argument for possible motivations behind the addition of violence against Svanhvít in 19HsG, it would be necessary to analyse it in the context of different ways of tackling violence against women in Icelandic literature in general, and such an investigation lies outside the scope of the present study.<sup>26</sup>

4.3 Origins

Considering the dissemination of the work across known manuscripts, the origins of 19HsG seem to be tied to the literary endeavours of lay scholars in Northern Iceland at the beginning of the nineteenth century. All manuscripts preserving 19HsG were written roughly between 1800 and 1837, with three certainly linked to Northern Iceland, specifically the Skagafjörðu and Eyjafjörðu areas. The geographical origins of the fourth manuscript, B11109, remain uncertain; it is a composite manuscript consisting of parts written in hands that have not yet been identified as belonging to any known scribe.

It is worth mentioning that one of these manuscripts, Reykjavík, Landsbókasafn, Lbs 2404 8vo (L2404), was written by Gísli Konráðsson (1787–1877), one of the most active scribes of the early nineteenth century. Gísli was born in Vellir in the Vallhólmur area of Skagafjörður.<sup>27</sup> He was the son of Konráð Gíslason (d. 1798), a farmer and craftsman, and his third wife, Jófríður Björnsdóttir. Gísli changed his residency a couple of times in his lifetime within the Skagafjarðarsýla area in Northern Iceland, but in the year 1852 he settled on Flatey in East Barðastrandarsýsla (Westfjords), where he spent the rest of his life. Gísli was the father of Konráð Gíslason (1808–1891), a professor of Nordic languages at the University of Copenhagen.<sup>28</sup>

Gísli Konráðsson was not only an extremely active scribe, but also a poet and author of many texts of a historicising character. Although he never received formal education (he taught himself how to write), he is sometimes called Gísli the historian (Ice. Gísli sagnfræðingur) due to his burning interest in history and genealogy, expressed for example in his work Húnvetninga saga, which is devoted to the history of Húnaþing from around 1700 to 1850.<sup>29</sup> Gísli was also responsible for compiling and rewriting many Icelandic folk tales and sagas.<sup>30</sup> He is considered the author of, among other texts, two sagas usually classified as late Íslendingasögur, Skáld-Helga saga and Porsteins saga Geirnefjufóstra.<sup>31</sup> The former is a prose adaptation of Skáld-Helga rímur, which in turn are believed to be a version of a lost medieval saga.<sup>32</sup> The oldest known manuscript of Gísli's Skáld-Helga saga, Lbs 1316 8vo, is written in the hand of Þorsteinn Gíslason (1776–1838) from Stokkahlaðir, south of Akureyri in Northern Iceland, and is dated to 1827. The same scribe, who wrote one of 19HsG manuscripts, Lbs 1572 4to, discussed further in this chapter. The earliest known and dated manuscripts of Porsteins saga Geirnefjufóstra are ÍBR 9 4to, dated to 1816, in the hand of Einar Bjarnason (1785–1856), and Lbs 284 8vo, dated to 1818, in Gísli's own hand.<sup>33</sup>

All these manuscripts are associated with scribes who were active in Northern Iceland at the beginning of the nineteenth century. Furthermore, it is worth noting that 19HsG appears together with Porsteins saga Geirnefjufóstra in two manuscripts, B11109 and L2404. In this context, it seems not unlikely that Gísli was also responsible for 19HsG. Assuming that Gísli Konráðsson, an autodidact who did not receive any formal education, did not start composing sagas be-

The provenance of selected nineteenth-century adaptations of potentially lost sagas linked to Gísli Konráðsson, such as, Porsteins saga Geirnefjufóstra, Skáld-Helga saga and 19HsG, was the subject of my presentation at the International Saga Conference in August 2018; Kapitan, 'Between Transmission and Reception: Lost Medieval Sagas and Their Post-Medieval Manifestations.' An article stemming from this presentation is yet to be published, as further research into the scribal and literary context associated with the production of these texts is necessary. I am grateful to Shaun Hughes for directing my attention towards the collaboration between Gísli Konráðsson and Jón Espólín during my viva voce in December 2018. This lead is partially explored in the current chapter, which outlines some avenues for future research.

Simek and Hermann Pálsson's lexicon incorrectly lists Lbs 2474 4to (dated to ca. 1720), as one of the earliest manuscripts preserving Porsteins saga Geirnefjufóstra, but Lbs 2474 4to does not preserve this text, see: Páll Eggert Ólason, Skrá, III:323–324 and the Handrit.org description, archived on 04/03/2024 at https://handrit.is/manuscript/view/is/Lbs04-2474/.

fore he turned at least 15, the year 1802 would serve as the earliest possible terminus post quem for the writing of 19HsG.<sup>34</sup>

Gísli Konráðsson is not, however, the only plausible candidate in this matter. He states himself in his autobiography that he composed Þorsteins saga Geirnefufóstra for the amusement of his close friend, Jón Espólín, who apparently appreciated the archaic style of the text:

Gísli diktaði og sögu Þorsteins Geirnefsfóstra, og sýndi Espólín að gamni sínu, og kallaði Espólín hana sennilega samda að orðfæri og öðru, sem forn væri.<sup>35</sup>

(Gísli also composed the saga of Þorsteinn, the foster son of Geirnef, and showed it to Espólín for amusement, and Espólín called it convincingly crafted in its composition and other archaic matters.)

This suggests that Jón Espólín (1769–1836) was at least interested in reading contemporary adaptations of older materials and might have had inspired Gísli to compose stories in some archaising style. In fact, Jón Espólín's (1769–1836) interests were not limited to merely reading new reworkings of old sagas, he also created some. He is, for instance, considered the author of another prose reworking of some older materials, namely Hálfdanar saga gamla. The prose saga, Hálfdanar saga gamla, is based on the rímur of Hálfdan, which were composed by Hannes Bjarnason (1776–1838) for Jón Espólín in 1822.<sup>36</sup> Notably, this prose adaptation of the rímur also appears together with 19HsG in one of the manuscripts, L2404, written in Gísli's hand. This suggests that both men were interested in composing sagas about ancient topics and imitating the ancient saga style for their common amusement.

34. While the youngest known scribes of HsG were teenagers at the time of writing of the saga, for instance, Eggert Hákonarson was fifteen or seventeen and Þorsteinn Jóhannesson was seventeen, it is uncertain whether a similar age limit can be used for the composing of sagas. It is also worth mentioning that Gísli was supposed to tell stories to entertain his mother, and he is believed to have composed his first stanza when he was eight or nine years old, see: Gísli Konráðsson and Sighvatur Grímsson, ‘Æfiágrí Gísla sagnfræðings Konráðssonar’, 32.

36. Finnur Sigmundsson, Rímnatal, I:200; Jón Espólín, Saga Jóns Espólíns hins fróða, sýslumanns í Hegraneßpingi, 158.

According to a note accompanying Hálfdanar saga gamla in another manuscript, some people originally considered it to be an ancient saga until the author himself openly admitted to composing it:

Þese saga er uppdiktud af syslumanni sál. J. Espolin og heldu Jmsir hana í fyrstunni fornrit en adrir neitudu þangad til hann sjálfur vidgekk ad hafa samið hana frá stofni (ÍB 618 8vo, f. 55v).

(This saga is composed by the sýslumaður, J. Espólín, and various people considered it at first an ancient text, but others denied this was the case until he himself admitted to composing it from traditional materials.)

This note is important because it provides contemporary evidence for the reception of at least some of these modern adaptations as truly ancient texts. Furthermore, it makes Jón Espólín a likely candidate to be considered as a potential author of 19HsG.

Jón Espólín and Gísli Konráðsson were known to be close friends, as Gísli himself wrote in his autobiography, ‘jafnan var Espólin góður vinur Gísla; fræddist Gísli og af honum að mörgu’ (Espólin was always a good friend of Gísli and Gísli learned a lot from him).<sup>37</sup> Furthermore, they lived relatively near each other. From 1808 to 1817, the two men lived some thirty kilometres apart, with Gísli Konráðsson at Langamýri in Skagafjarðarsý la and Jón Espólín at Viðvík also in Skagafjarðarsý la. Gísli Konráðsson moved a couple of times, but for most of his life he stayed in the Skagafjörðu area, at least until Jón’s death.<sup>38</sup> Their proximity facilitated regular contact, opening up the possibility that 19HsG could be a product of their intellectual exchange and collaboration.

Jón was undoubtedly an important and influential figure in the literary circles of the early nineteenth century in Skagafjörður with many active scribes, saga authors, and poets belonging to his network. Gísli composed Rímur af Attila Húnakóngi for him, while Hannes Bjarnason, in addition to the aforementioned Rímur af Hálf-dani konungi gamla, also composed Rímur af Theseus Abenuman-

At least one more noteworthy poetic adaptation of another potentially lost medieval saga is associated with this intellectual milieu, although not directly with Jón. Rímur af Andra jarli were composed collaboratively by Hannes Bjarnason and Gísli Konráðsson. These nineteenth-century rímur of Andri belong to the tradition that can be traced back to the lost medieval saga of Andri, which, just like our Hrómundar saga, exists in multiple literary adaptations in prose and verse. The prose Andra saga is derived from Andra rímur, which share a number of common features with Griplur, among them the figure of Svanhvít who, according to Björn Karel, is the same person in both stories, the mound breaking of Bólverk (in Andra rímur) and Práinn (in Griplur), and the battle by Elfasker. The similarities between these stories, pointed out by, for example, Ursula Brown, have never been the subject of in-depth scholarly investigation. A comparative analysis of these stories would be highly desirable to provide not only insight into the process of literary adaptation in Iceland from the medieval period to the nineteenth century but also, and potentially more importantly, the reception of the Icelandic medieval past in Iceland in the early modern period, before the rise of national romanticism.

Further investigation is needed to explore the extent of the creative activities of Gísli, Jón, and their contemporaries in the production and dissemination of medieval stories and their adaptations, enabling these narratives to transition freely from one medium to another and remain accessible to the audiences contemporary to themselves. A detailed stylistic comparison of their known texts could provide valuable evidence in identifying the author of 19HsG, but the authorship question must, for the time being, remain unanswered as it lies beyond the scope of the present study.

Exploring the language of the saga reveals diverse dialectic and archaising features in the 19HsG texts, which could certainly be of interest for linguists and helpful in understanding the saga's origins and transmission. Notably, in B11109, 'of' replaces 'um' in phrases like 'þar of pláts' for þar um pláss (f. 106v), and some labiodentals are voiced, as in 'abli' for aflí (f. 107r). The high linguistic variation and potential regional influences in the manuscripts calls for further linguistic study of 19HsG, which is beyond the scope of this work. It can be tentatively observed that the language seems to corroborate the nineteenth century origins of the saga. On the lexical level, there are some words which are known exclusively from other nineteenth-century works.<sup>39</sup> Among them, we can find words such as ‘piltkind’<sup>40</sup> and ‘fjárpípa’<sup>41</sup>. The first attestation of ‘piltkind’ in Ritmálssafn Orðabókar Háskólans is from Steingrímur Thorsteinsson’s translation of Púsund og ein nött from 1857–64, but our manuscripts pre-date this occurrence. Similarly, the compound fjárpípa is first attested in Fjölnir, where it appears in the Ævintýr af Eggeri Glóa. This is a translation of Ludwig Tieck’s (1773–1853) short novel Der blonde Eckbert translated into Icelandic by Jónas Hallgrímsson and Konráð Gíslason.<sup>42</sup> Our manuscripts of 19HsG again pre-date this occurrence.

Among other expressions that can appear unusual to readers mostly familiar with Old Norse–Icelandic sagas, we can mention the term ‘arma dubba’ used to address Svanhvít in the episode describing her disagreement with Ólafur. It is an offensive term for women with the earliest examples in Ritmálssafn Orðabókar Háskólans from the seventeenth century, among them occurrences in the works of Hallgrímur Pétursson (1614–1674).<sup>43</sup> In Blöndal’s dictionary, dubba is translated into Danish as ‘kvinde, laptaske’ and is illustrated by an example ‘sagði þær örmu dubbur [...] skyldu’. Elsewhere in the dictionary we can find a similar expression ‘þegi þú, þín arma gardranorn’, which is translated into Danish as ‘ti stille, din forbandede Heks’ (be quiet you damned witch), indicating that the term can be mildly translated as a ‘damned woman’.<sup>44</sup>

40. The word ‘piltkind’ can be found in B11109 (f. 113v:11) and L679 (f. 55v:30), but it is absent from L2404 (f. 72r:6) and L1572 (f. 82v:13).

4.4 Manuscripts of 19HsG

Now it is finally time to turn towards the extant manuscripts preserving 19HsG. As we already know, all four of them were written in the early nineteenth century and are listed in relative chronological order in Table 4.1. In this section, we first focus on the descriptions of the individual manuscripts preserving 19HsG, examining their physical features and contents, before turning towards the textual relationships among the texts of 19HsG as well as the manuscript context in which the saga appears.

BL Add. 11109

BL Add. 11109 (B11109), in the British Library in London, is a paper manuscript in quarto, which consists of ii+140+i leaves.<sup>45</sup> The dating of the manuscript is uncertain. The Stories for all time catalogue suggests that B11109 was written in unknown hands between 1800 and 1850, whereas the ‘Online Catalogue of the British Library’, dates it to the eighteenth century.<sup>46</sup>

B11109 contains twelve texts, mainly classified as fornaldarsögur, but also konungabættir, Íslendingabættir, and later Íslendingasögur. The codex begins with a table of contents, listing all twelve sagas preserved in this manuscript, which are: Starckaðar saga gamla, Hauks þáttur hábrókar, Póris þáttur hasts og Bárðar birtu, Styrbjarnar þáttur Svíakappa, Hálfdanar þáttur svarta, Þorsteins saga Geirnefjúfóstra, Þorsteins þáttur tjaldstæðings, Gríms saga Skeljungsbana, Hulðar saga hinnar miklu, 19HsG (ff 106v–132r), Hákonar þáttur Hárekssonar, and Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra.

At least four codicological units can be distinguished in B11109, and at least four different hands can be distinguished: hand 1 wrote ff 2–40, hand 2 ff 41–48 and 55–88, hand 3 ff 49–54, and hand 4 from f. 89 onwards. The distribution of the scribal hands overlaps not only with the boundaries of the texts but also with the boundaries of the different types of paper used for particular parts, in which various watermarks can be found. Hand 3, for example, wrote on watermarked paper dated 1824, which allows us to establish a more precise dating for this part of the manuscript.<sup>47</sup> Meanwhile, hand 2 wrote a part containing

45. The manuscript is in a tight binding, which makes it impossible to safely examine its quire structure.

46. ‘Online Catalogue of the British Library’; currently unavailable online, but a print-screen from 10 December 2019 of the page can be found in Kapitan, ‘Perspectives on Digital Catalogs and Textual Networks of Old Norse Literature’, 85. The date in the Stories for all time catalogue, archived on 26/02/2024 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20240226124407/https://fasnl.net/manuscripts/123>, is based on Jón Helgason’s unpublished ‘Catalogue of the Icelandic Manuscripts in the British Library’. An alternative dating has been proposed by Lavender, ‘Whatever Happened to Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra?: Origin, Transmission and Reception of a Fornaldarsaga’, cf. Lavender, Long Lives of Short Sagas: The Irrepressibility of Narrative and the Case of Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra.

47. Kapitan, ‘Dating Paper Manuscripts Based on Watermarks: A Case Study of Selected Nineteenth-Century Icelandic Manuscripts’, 17–18.

The part containing 19HsG is written in hand 4, which employs a regular humanistic cursive with the overall appearance of nineteenth-century Icelandic script, but further work is needed to identify the scribe.<sup>48</sup>

The provenance of B11109 can be traced back to Finnur Magnússon (1781–1847), a professor of literature at the University of Copenhagen.<sup>49</sup> We have already encountered Finnur in the previous chapter, while discussing the provenance of B11108. Just as with B11108, B11109 was one of many Icelandic manuscripts that the British Museum purchased from Finnur in July 1837. Attesting to this, on the first front flyleaf of B11109, there is a note reading: ‘Purchased of Professor. | Finn Magnusen | July 1837.’ On the second front flyleaf there is the number ‘27’ in the top right corner, which is the catalogue number of this manuscript in Finnur’s catalogue. B11109 had to be one of the very few bound manuscripts in the collection, as it appears in the catalogue as a single item.<sup>50</sup> Furthermore, it is worth emphasising here that, according to Jón Helgason, the binding originates in Iceland, excluding the possibility that the binding of the manuscript was commissioned by Finnur in Copenhagen. Nothing is known about the history of ownership of B11109 before it was sold to the British Museum (and later transferred to the British Library along with other manuscript holdings of the museum).

48. This hand has been previously identified as the hand of Tómas Tómasson (1756–1811), a hreppstjóri from Stóra-Ásgeirsá in Northern Iceland (for his biography see Páll Eggert Ólason, Íslenzkar æviskrár, V:18). Based on this criteria the manuscript was dated to 1770–1811, Lavender, ‘Whatever Happened to Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra?: Origin, Transmission and Reception of a Fornaldarsaga’, 102. Palaeographic analysis of hand 4 and its comparison with selected manuscripts certainly written by Tómas Tómasson (Lbs 1585 4to, Lbs 1846 4to, and Lbs 381 fol.) does not support this identification.

Lbs 2404 8vo

Lbs 2404 8vo (L2404), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in octavo, consisting of 182 leaves gathered in twenty-two quires: I<sup>8</sup>–III<sub>8</sub>, IV<sup>10</sup>–V<sup>10</sup>, VI<sup>8</sup>– XIII<sub>8</sub>, XIV<sup>10</sup>, XV<sup>8</sup>–XXII<sup>8</sup>.

L2404 preserves eight texts in total, mostly short konunga- and Íslendingabættir, but also some Íslendingasögur, fornaldarsögur, and konungasögur. The texts appear in the following order: Hálfdanar saga gamla, 19HsG (ff 61r–100v), Sigurðar þáttur slefu, Grænlendinga þáttur, Hauks þáttur hábrókar, Borsteins saga Geirnefufóstra, Skálða saga, Styrbjarnar þáttur Svíakappa.

The manuscript can be divided into four codicological units or blocks. The first two texts, both fornaldarsögur, are written on separate series of quires: Hálfdanar saga gamla on quires I–VII and 19HsG on quires VIII–XII. The remaining shorter narratives occupy the following two blocks: Sigurðar þáttur slefu and Grænlendinga þáttur together fill quires XIII–XIV, and the last four texts in the manuscript occupy quires XV–XXII.

In Skrá, L2404 is dated to ca. 1805,<sup>51</sup> but the material evidence suggests a slightly later dating. The fourth quire is made of watermarked paper with the mark ‘Det Ørholmske Interessentskab’, used on paper manufactured at the Ørholm paper mill in Denmark between 1805 and 1832.<sup>52</sup> This timespan generally confirms the dating proposed for L2404 in the catalogue, but elsewhere in the manuscript, the paper is dated with the watermark containing the date 1810, establishing a terminus post quem for the manuscript’s writing.<sup>53</sup>

The manuscript is written entirely by Gísli Konráðsson (1787–1877), whom we have already encountered in the present chapter as one of the candidates for the authorship of 19HsG. Manuscripts in Gísli’s hand, though not highly decorated, were typically written with great care and precision, providing a pleasant aesthetic experience to their reader. L2404 is no exception.

53. Kapitan, ‘Dating Paper Manuscripts Based on Watermarks: A Case Study of Selected Nineteenth-Century Icelandic Manuscripts’, 18–19.

There are various marginal notes in the manuscript, most of which seemto refer to the scribe's family members. On the paste-down, there is a note which reads 'Saugubók þessa á Eigill Gottskalsson (sic) á Völlnumm' (Egill Gottskálksson from Vellir owns this saga book). By the fina words of 19HsG, on f. 100v, in the outer margin, the name 'Gisli' is written vertically. On f. 182v, there are several scribbles: 'Jónas', 'Godur er Sá madur [segir] Bjarni Bjarnason', 'S[ol]gur [á] Bókinni á E.Gottskalksson', 'Guli á', 'Egils-son'.

All manuscripts with shelfmarks Lbs 2404 -2413 8vo were purchased by the Landsbókasafn in 1935 from Jónas Egilsson (1864-1942), and most of them likely previously belonged to his father, Egill Gottskálksson (1819-1887), and grandfather Gottskálk Egilsson (1783-1834) from Vellir.<sup>54</sup> It is important to recall that Jófríður Björnsdóttir, Gísli Konráðsson's mother, after the death of Gísli's father, Konráð Gíslason, in 1798, married Konráð's nephew, Gottskálk Egilsson from Vellir. It is his descendants whose names appear in the ownership notes.

Lbs 1572 4to

Lbs 1572 4to (L1572), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in quarto, consisting of 145 leaves.<sup>55</sup> The manuscript is preserved unbound in a conservation box, with the leather cover detached from the loose quires, some of which are later additions. It consists of twenty-one quires: I<sup>4</sup>, II<sup>8</sup> (wants 1), III<sup>8</sup>-IV<sub>8</sub>, V<sup>10</sup>, VI<sup>4</sup>-VII<sup>4</sup>, VIII<sup>10</sup>, IX<sup>10</sup> (wants 10), X<sup>6</sup>, XI<sup>8</sup>, XII<sup>4</sup>, XIII<sub>8</sub>, XIV<sup>6</sup>-XV<sup>6</sup>, XVI<sub>8</sub>-XVII<sub>8</sub>, XVIII<sup>6</sup>, XIX<sub>8</sub>-XX<sub>8</sub>, XXI<sup>6</sup>.<sup>56</sup>

L1572 preserves thirty texts, mostly short tales about the legendary heroes and kings of Scandinavia, traditionally classifi d as fornaldarsögur, konungasögur, þættir, and historiographic texts. The manuscript begins with a table of contents (f. 1r-v) which is a later addition, and the following sagas: Gautreks saga, Hrólfs saga Gautrekssonar, Skálða saga, Áns saga bogsveigis, Friðþjófs saga, Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra, Porsteins saga Víkingssonar, Vermundar þáttur konungs, Af Upplendinga konungum, Ragnarssona þáttur, Brot af

The manuscript was written between 1815 and 1827, with the dating based on the dates of the colophons. 19HsG is followed by a colophon dated to 1819.

The first gathering of the manuscript is most likely a later addition. The leaves are made of smooth paper and the text is written in a different hand than the majority of the manuscript. They contain a table of contents and the beginning of Gautreks saga. The same hand can be identified in the fifth quire, where the first three conjoint leaves are made of the same paper as most of the manuscript. The following two conjoint leaves, however, are made of the same paper as the first quire of the manuscript, also with a younger yet unidentified hand. The manuscript previously belonged to Stefán Jónsson (1802–1890), a member of the Icelandic national assembly, who may have supplied the table of contents.<sup>57</sup>

The main part of the manuscript was written by Þorsteinn Gíslason from Stokkahlaðir, whom we already encountered as the scribe of the oldest manuscript of Skáld-Helga saga, Lbs 1316 8vo. Þorsteinn, a hreppstjóri and poet, was also a very active scribe,<sup>58</sup> with his hand found in at least fifty-five manuscripts in Landsbókasafn. Although there is no full signature in L1572, the initials P.G. on f. 46v, 122v, and 70v closely resemble his known signature in, for example, Lbs 1573 4to. The striking similarities in the layout and

57. Two other manuscripts in Stefán's collection, Lbs 1573 4to and Lbs 1569 4to, also contain supplied tables of contents, which might be the owner's intervention. I did not have access to a sufficient sample of Stefán Jónsson's hand to determine this. Moreover, a comparison of the script on the title pages of Lbs 1573 4to and L1572 is inconclusive. The hands seem to differ remarkably in the ductus of many letters, but this requires further research. For an alternative explanation, see Lavender, 'Whatever Happened to Illuga saga Griðarfóstra?: Origin, Transmission and Reception of a Fornaldarsaga', 103.

58. Páll Eggert Ólason, Íslenzkar æviskrár, V:203.

script type found in L1572 with Þorsteinn's other leave no doubt that L1572 was written by him.

Not much is known about the provenance and the history of ownership of this manuscript before it joined the Landsbókasafn. According to Handrit.org, the library acquired L1572 in 1911, along with other manuscripts previously owned by Stefán Jónsson. Today, they are catalogued under the shelfmarks Lbs 1567-1580 4to.<sup>59</sup>

Lbs 679 4to

Lbs 679 4to (L679), held in the Landsbókasafn Íslands in Reykjavík, is a paper manuscript in quarto, consisting of iii+111+iii leaves.<sup>60</sup> The volume is bound in a tight library binding, preventing safe examination of its quire structure. It is dated to around 1834, based on the sole colophon in this manuscript.

L679 preserves eight texts, all entertaining narratives of a legendary and chivalric nature, which are: Hulðar saga, Perus saga meistara, Galafreys saga, Sagan af Theodilo riddara og hans kvennu, Drauma-Jóns saga, Konráðs saga keisarasonar, 19HsG (ff 50r-70r), Haralðs saga Hveðrubana. The text of 19HsG is divided into chapters with individual headings, highlighting the most prominent episodes in the saga (all listed on p. 180).

On p. 221, there is a colophon stating the name of the scribe, date, and place of writing:

og hafi þeir allir þöck sem hljða og lesa enn sá aungva sem skrifad hefur ljígi þessa | skrifud á Heidi og endud þann 17 Januari 1834 | eptir öðru exemplari sem skrifad hafdi verid 1750 d 25 Arilis (sic) Testerar Þorsteinn Þorsteinsson.

(All who listen or read shall have gratitude, but not the one who wrote these lies. Written at Heiði and completed on 17 January 1834, following another exemplar, which was written on 25 April 1750. Testifie Þorsteinn Þorsteinsson.)

59. This information is not included in the description of L1572, archived on 5/04/2024 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20240305110023/https://handrit.is/manuscript/view/is/Lbs04-1567>, but it can be found in the description of Lbs 1567 4to archived on 5/04/2024 at <https://web.archive.org/web/20240305110023/https://handrit.is/manuscript/view/is/Lbs04-1567>.

60. According to Páll Eggert Ólason, the manuscript consists of 122 leaves, Páll Eggert Ólason, Skrá, I:308.

The manuscript is written in humanistic cursive, in the hand of Þorsteinn Þorsteinsson. Þorsteinn was born in 1792 at Hamar in the Fljót area of Skagafjörðu in Northern Iceland, and died in 1863 on the island of Málmey in the same fjord.<sup>61</sup> He was the son of Þorsteinn Guðmundsson (1756–1832) and Kristbjörg Björnsdóttir (ca. 1760–1824).<sup>62</sup> Despite not receiving formal education, Þorsteinn's significant interest in books led to a substantial collection of manuscripts, many of which Þorsteinn copied himself.<sup>63</sup>

Probably due to his lack of formal education, Þorsteinn's scribal abilities were questioned by his contemporaries, who emphasised that his copies contained errors and omissions.<sup>64</sup> 19HsG in L679 is no different in this regard, as will be discussed further in the section devoted to the textual relationships. This shortcoming of Þorsteinn's scribal enterprise did not, however, prevent active collectors of his time from demonstrating a remarkable interest in his collection of manuscripts, as evidenced by Jón Árnason's correspondence. There, Þorsteinn's collection was discussed on multiple occasions.<sup>65</sup> Even though Þorsteinn Þorsteinsson cannot be considered a careful and accurate copyist, he seemed to care greatly about the provenance of the texts he copied. He frequently signed his manuscripts with his name and date of copying, as well as information regarding his exemplar.<sup>66</sup> Unfortunately, no commentary or colophon accompanies 19HsG.

L679 belongs to a larger collection of manuscripts previously owned by Eggert Briem (1840–1893). Eggert Briem was a vicar from Höskuldsstaðir in Suður-Múlasýsla and the husband of Dóm-hildur Þorsteinsdóttir, the daughter of Þorsteinn Gíslason, whom we have already met as the scribe of L1572.<sup>67</sup> Eggert Briem's collection was acquired by the library on 8 May 1893, and his manuscripts today bear shelfmarks Lbs 659–744 4to, many of which are in Þorsteinn Þorsteinsson's hand. On f. 1r of L679, there is an addition in the upper margin that reads 'Nr. 21', which must be Briem's shelfmark, as similar notes in the same hand, can be found in other manuscripts in his collection.

Textual relationships

The variants appearing in the extant texts of 19HsG illustrate the usual post-medieval Icelandic scribal production, which focused more on transmitting the story than delivering accurate transcripts. A notable example is at the saga's end, where the scribes of 19HsG slightly modified the ending, changing the emphasis of the final remarks, see Table 4.2. Each scribe had a unique take on the ending. The most concise version is in L679, stating that Hrómundur and Svanhvít lived long and happily, had many children, some of whom died young, while others' descendants became heroes of other sagas. Notably, there's no mention of their sons, Björnólfur and Hróálfur, included in all other manuscripts.

L2404 provides additional information about the historical descendants of Hrómundur, listing his sons and connecting him with Ingólfur landnámamaður, the first settler of Iceland. The scribe of L2404 utilises information known from Landnámabók about Hrómundur's descendants to emphasise the importance of this family for the history of Iceland. The historiographical and genealogical interest of the scribe, Gísli Konráðsson, is not a new discovery. Gísli himself wrote the following in a letter to Jón Árnason:

Ættartölur hefi eg svo margar saman tekið, að eg man ekki að telja þær, en það er Snóksdalín mest að þakka, einkum hér vestra allt fram að Sturlungu, Sögunum og Landnámu.<sup>68</sup>

(I have collected so many genealogical tables that I cannot even count them, but it is Snóksdalín that deserves the greatest gratitude, especially regarding the genealogies in the west, all the way back to Sturlunga, the sagas, and The Book of Settlement.)

Here, Gísli acknowledges the work of Ólafur Guðmundsson Snóksdalín (1761–1843), who compiled a substantial collection of genealogies, known simply as Ættatölubók.<sup>69</sup>

Meanwhile, L1572 does not contain an elaborate genealogy but includes the names of Hrómundur's and Svanhvít's sons as an addition, marked with an asterisk. The asterisk refers to a footnote with the names of Björnólfur and Hróalfur. This additional note also appears in B11109, but the asterisk is placed in a slightly different position (see Table 4.2). B11109 also appends a short formulaic comment at the end of the saga, in which the scribe expresses his personal gratitude to those who read or listened to his story. This comment is absent from the remaining manuscripts.

Every manuscript provides a slightly different text, and none of them could have served as an exemplar for the others. All of them include numerous individual readings, absent from the remaining manuscripts. Considering the variants registered in the variant apparatus of the edition, which includes some minor readings but is not exhaustive in this regard, B11109 preserves 89 individual readings, L1572: 295, L2404: 356, and L679: 988.

68. Finnur Sigmundsson, Úr fórum Jóns Árnasonar, sendibréf, II:80.

69. Snóksdalín, Ættatölubók: Lbs 451-453 fol.

Among the individual readings of B11109, we find the following examples that exclude the possibility of this text serving as the exemplar for the remaining texts:

L679, L1572, L2404] B11109

einn maður yðar] Armaður yðar.
stærstu launum] stærstu gjöfum.

Among the individual readings of L1572, there are:

B11109, L679, L2404] L1572

margir stólkongar] fylkis kongar.
Héðinn] Haki.
þat er Hraungviðr átti] ÷.

Among the individual readings of L2404, there are:

B11109, L679, L1572] L2404

jómfrúr] meýar.
er víkingar af vissu] þá víkingar verða þess varir þá

And finally, among the individual readings of L679, we can find the following examples:

B11109, L2404, L1572] L679

að hreysti og öllum frækleika] að öllum íþrottum og hreisti.
settist niður] ÷.

Even though L1572 and L2404 share more readings with B11109 than with L679, they cannot be descendants of B11109. This is because there are numerous examples where L1572 and L2404 agree with each other against the readings shared by B11109 and L679. This suggests that these two texts share a common ancestor. Among these readings are the following:

B11109, L679] L1572, L2404

Vallaug hiet] + al. Gunnlöð móðir hennar (+var L2404) Brynhildur, dóttir Haka konungs í Skáney.

Based on the textual criteria, the known manuscripts of 19HsG can be classified into two groups, represented as two separate branches of the stemma. L679 is placed alone on one side and B11109, L1572, and L2404 on the other, as illustrated in Figure 4.1. L2404 and L1572 are descendants of a common ancestor which is related to B11109, but which introduced readings exclusive to its two descendants.

The paratextual features of our saga, such as chapter headings, can be used to support conclusions drawn from textual variants. L679 is the only manuscript that preserves 19HsG with chapter headings referring to the main events of the individual chapters. Notably, chapter ten lacks a descriptive heading and is introduced simply as ‘10di Capituli’. Elsewhere in the saga in this manuscript, the word for chapter (kapituli) is always abbreviated and starts with an initial ‘k’ rather than ‘c’. Interestingly, B11109 and L1572 omit the number ten and present the saga with incorrect chapter numbering. Although the saga is divided into twenty-one chapters, the last chapter in these manuscripts is numbered twenty-two. It is possible this the numbering mistake was initially introduced in X, influencing the remaining manuscripts, but the scribes chose to address this issue in different ways.

Manuscript context

to be made regarding the texts appearing together with Hrómundar saga. Texts of forty-seven different works appear alongside 19HsG, but only seven of them appear more than once: Hákonar þáttur Hárekssonar, Hauks þáttur hábrókar, Hulðar saga hinnar miklu, Illuga saga Gríðarfóstra, Skálða saga, Styrbjarnar þáttur Svíakappa, and Porsteins saga Geirnefjufóstra. They all appear in two out of the four manuscripts.

At least two clear criteria can be used to group some of these texts: the geography of the events described in the saga and the time of the saga's creation. In terms of the geography of the events described by the narratives, the majority of the sagas frequently co-occurring with 19HsG deal with events that take place in mainland Scandinavia before the settlement of Iceland. Although not all of them are traditionally classified as fornaldarsögur, they are adventure tales recounting the adventures of young Scandinavians, their travels abroad, and returns to their home countries. As such, the manuscript context of 19HsG is not much different from that of 17HsG. Regarding the time of composition, two of the sagas frequently co-occurring with 19HsG are post-medieval adaptations of older material: Hulðar saga hinnar miklu was written in the eighteenth century while Porsteins saga Geirnefjufóstra was written in the early nineteenth century by Gísli Konráðsson (1787–1877). It is worth emphasising, that there are also some other younger sagas which appear with 19HsG in individual manuscripts. These include, for example, Gríms saga jarlssonar, Haralðs saga Hveðrubana, and Hálfdanar saga gamla, all relatively young adaptations of older materials.

Discussion and Conclusions

This study had one primary goal, as hinted at by the title of this book: to make the largely overlooked transmission and adaptation history of the lost saga of Hrómundur known to a broader audience. It aimed to shed light on its changing forms and the diverse literary contexts in which it appeared, as well as to reveal the scribal networks and different readership circles in which the story circulated until the nineteenth century. My hope is that I have successfully demonstrated that the medieval Hrómundar saga may well be lost, but the story of Hrómundur is certainly not forgotten. Like many other Icelandic sagas, HsG has remained alive and well in the literary fabric of Iceland for many centuries.

The first chapter discussed the historical context in which 17HsG was produced. The focus was on the antiquarian interests of seventeenth-century Scandinavian scholars in stories dealing with the ancient past of the North, as presented in, among other sources, official documents like appointment letters. These sources shed light on the importance of Icelandic sagas for contemporary historical and antiquarian research. Using evidence from the extant correspondence of people like Pormóður Torfason and Árni Magnússon, I was able to demonstrate that the story of Hrómundur was subject of scholarly conversations, with copies of the saga being sought after, produced, and distributed relatively quickly.

Agreeing with previous scholarship regarding Jón Eggertsson's authorship of the saga, I proposed that 17HsG is a prosification of the text of the rimur preserved in the lost manuscript *JE 27 4to, which Jón obtained during his collecting mission in Iceland. This interpretation explains previous contradictory interpretations of the relationship between the saga and the rimur, as it is indeed impossible to determine which extant manuscript of Griplur the saga is based on. I also highlighted the co-occurrence of Bragða-Ölvis rímur and saga together with the prose and verse adaptations of the story of Hrómundur in AM 601 b 4to and *JE 27 4to, suggesting that the sagas have a shared origin and came from Jón Eggertsson's pen. Further research into the Bragða-Ölvis saga tradition may reveal further connections.

Staying in the seventeenth century, Chapter Two focused on the oldest extant manuscripts preserving 17HsG. Among them are not only the manuscripts discussed in previous scholarship but also some secondary manuscripts that gave us insight into the early dissemination of the saga. Variants from these texts were used in the edition. I analysed the textual relationships between the texts of 17HsG in these manuscripts, confirming that AM 601 b 4to preserves the best text of the saga, which also is the archetype of the extant tradition. The textual relationships provided further evidence supporting some of the arguments made in Chapter One regarding the circulation of the saga among the scholarly elites of the seventeenth century. Furthermore, I discussed the manuscript context in which the saga appears, noting the co-occurrence of Bragða-Ölvis saga with 17HsG in the majority of the oldest manuscripts. This indicates a close relationship between the two texts in the early stages of their respective transmission histories, which might be the result of their assumed common origins. These two texts appear together in four out of eight manuscripts, but two of these eight are today single-text codices.

Chapter Three turned towards the remaining manuscripts of 17HsG, classifying them into three textual groups already distinguished in the previous chapter. The analysis of the transmission history of this saga, together with the material analysis of individual codices, provides countless examples of fascinating stories of Icelandic book production and circulation. For instance, some manuscripts in text-group A reveal that our saga, written in Copenhagen at the end of the seventeenth century, became especially popular in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries in north-west Iceland, as the manuscripts originate mainly from Dalasýsla and Húnavatnssýsla. Among these manuscripts, we find examples providing insight into the global circulation of Icelandic manuscripts. Among them there is G 52/1, which made its way to Canada and back to Iceland. While BL Add. 11108, containing various parts written at different points in time in distant places, including Vestur-Skaftafelssýsla and Vopnafjörður ended up as a single codex owned by Finnur Magnússon in Copenhagen, who then sold it to the British Museum in London.

Similarly, Ms Germ qu. 27 (M27), written in Kvennabrekka in Dalasýsla, became part of the private collection of Christian Friedrich Rühs, a professor of history at the University of Berlin, and later joined the collections of the Staatsbibliothek in Berlin. Rühs, interested in the early history of Scandinavia, compared the texts preserved in his manuscript with Björner's edition and considered the latter 'inaccurate' compared to the texts of M27. This provides an insight into the history of scholarship, raising questions about how often young manuscripts coming directly from Iceland were considered more reliable than early modern editions merely due to their origin. After all, we know that the text of 17HsG in Björner's edition, based on Papp. fol. nr 67, is closer to AM 601 b 4to than the text of M27, which includes several changes that most likely arose over the course of more than a hundred years of the saga's transmission.

Multiple manuscripts contain marginal notes, which inform our understanding of the saga's readership. For instance, the evidence of extensive marginalia in Lbs 381 fol. demonstrates that 17HsG was not exclusively treated as an entertaining narrative in Iceland, contrary to what is predominantly argued in scholarship about legendary and chivalric sagas. It illustrates that not only learned continental scholars but also Icelandic audiences were interested in the potential historical aspects of fornaldarsögur, especially genealogies. This is particularly interesting in the context of other sagas that frequently co-occur with 17HsG in the younger manuscripts of text-group A. All of these sagas either deal with members of the same families or mention other characters known from other sagas also included in these volumes. As such, they bear testimony to the long-standing genealogical inclination of Icelandic readers, as also demonstrated by the manuscripts of 19HsG, discussed in Chapter Four.

Meanwhile, some manuscripts in text-group B illustrate how handwritten books circulated in Icelandic families for several generations and that they likely served as exemplars for younger still extant manuscripts. The textual relationships between BL Add. 4859 (B4859), Lbs 633 fol. (L633) and AM 395 fol. (A395) provide insight into the circulation of books and scribal networks in early modern Iceland. B4859, written for Magnús Jónsson from Vigur, travelled within one family from Vigur to Víðidalstunga, where Magnús' daughter Porbjörg lived with her husband, Páll Vídalín, and where it most likely served as an exemplar for L633, written for Lárus (Lauritz) Gottrup, who lived at that time at Þingeyrar, not far from Víðidalstunga. Then, L633, most likely written at Þingeyrar, made its way to Munaðarnes in Mýrasýsla, where Kár Ólafsson lived. Kár received L633 as a gift from Porbjörn Bjarnason, who was the foster father of Kár's mother. While in Mýrasýsla, L633 served as an exemplar for A395, written at Akrar.

A similar situation is illustrated by examining the textual relationship between BL Add. 4875 (B4875) and Lbs 222 fol. (L222) and exploring the possible ownership history of L222. L222 was passed down the maternal line within the family of Magnús Jónsson from Vigur. L222, written in Sandar in Dýrafjörðu probably for Magnús Jónsson, later most likely served as an exemplar for B4875. B4875 was probably written in Eyri in Skutulsfjörðu by Eggert Hákonarson, Magnús Jónsson's great grandson.

The prominent role of Magnús Jónsson's family in the circulation of 17HsG can also be linked to the appearance, or at least to the transmission, of the eighteenth-century version of the saga, 18HsG. One of the two manuscripts preserving 18HsG, JS 634 4to, was partially written by Markús Snæbjarnarson, Magnús Jónsson's grandson. While the exemplar of this manuscript is unknown, it is certain, based on textual criteria, that manuscripts of 18HsG belong to text-group B. The other manuscript of 18HsG, Lbs 840 4to, cannot be directly linked to Magnús, but it also has a well-documented history of ownership. The manuscript contains notes with the names of the great-grandchildren of its commissioner, Bjarni Pétursson, enabling us to track its history of ownership for three generations.

The appearance of 18HsG allows us to ask questions about the reception of 17HsG in Iceland in the early eighteenth century. 18HsG appears to be an attempt to improve the saga stylistically by adding explanatory phrases that made the narration easier to follow. With its laconic and episodic style, perhaps 17HsG was not a satisfactory read for the eighteenth-century audience. If 17HsG was indeed as a summary of the rímur composed with the scholarly audience of mainland Scandinavia in mind, then its intended audience was more interested in the content of the saga than its artistic form. In this context, 18HsG can be viewed as an attempt to make it into an entertaining and coherent story intended for some lay Icelandic audiences. This would fulfil the objective of Lbs 840 4to, as suggested by the title page, ‘for the entertainment of those who wish to read and hear’.

Another manuscript of 17HsG, AM 395 fol., provides insight into the reception of Icelandic literature in Denmark. The saga classification, which appears in the table of contents of this manuscript, was most likely supplied after the volume was sold at auction in Copenhagen to the family of Danish scholars of Icelandic origin, Skúli Thorlacius and Birgir Thorlacius. The classification reflects the general scholarly atmosphere of the late-eighteenth and early-nineteenth century when fornaldarsögur were still seen as a mixture of history and fiction. A similar approach can be found, for example, in Müller’s Sagabibliothek.

The last part of Chapter Three discussed manuscripts that preserve 17HsG whose text is derived from printed editions. An analysis of the variants appearing in these manuscripts showed differences in the treatment of the text. The manuscripts based on Rafn’s edition, all written in Iceland, demonstrate in practice the fluidity of vernacular text transmission with free and intentional scribal intervention, sticking to the story but rephrasing and reformulating the wording. In contrast, the foreign copyists, transcribing Björner’s edition, were very careful in their transcriptions, likely due to limited knowledge of Icelandic and/or the possible scholarly purpose of their transcription. There are also differences in content arrangement in the examined manuscripts. Those based on Björner’s edition preserve the sagas in the same order as they appear in the edition and mainly stick to the texts available in the edition. Meanwhile, the order of the texts in the manuscripts based on Rafn’s edition appears more customised. The texts do not appear in the order of the edition, and the manuscripts contain a broad variety of other sagas. Thus, we can conclude that for Icelandic copyists, the printed text served as yet another exemplar and was treated in the same manner as texts transcribed from other manuscripts.

Finally, Chapter Four turned towards the transmission history of 19HsG. It discussed its possible origins, placing them in Northern Iceland within the learned circles of people such as Gísli Konráðsson and Jón Espólín. The textual analysis of the texts preserved in all known manuscripts of the saga suggests that they are all derived from a lost common ancestor. The ending of the saga in each of the manuscripts demonstrates the personal touch of the scribes. This is especially clear in Lbs 2404 8vo, where its scribe, Gísli Konráðsson, who was personally very interested in Icelandic genealogies, added information from Landnámabók about Hrómundur's descendants, thereby linking 19HsG to Icelandic historiography.

Furthermore, this chapter briefly outlined the relationship of 19HsG to other adaptations within the HsG tradition demonstrating that the author of this work drew freely from both Griplur and 17HsG. Additionally, I discussed select literary motifs typically seen in romances that feature prominently in 19HsG, despite some of them being absent from 17HsG and Griplur. Among them are supernatural elements, such as the appearance of a flying dragon in the narrative, or the changing of Hrómundur's appearance with the use of a magic stone.

The analysis of the manuscript context of 19HsG revealed that it frequently co-occurs with other sagas dealing with the adventures of legendary Scandinavian heroes, but especially with those composed in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, such as Þorsteins saga Geirnefjósstra and Huldar saga hinnar miklu. It seems that the sagas written at a similar time were transmitted together, presumably due to their similarity in style and/or overall aesthetics. There is, however, a great need for further research into the subject of eighteenth- and nineteenth-century sagas in general, in order to gain a better understanding of the circumstances of their creation and transmission as well as their position in the wider context of Icelandic literature.

While the discovery of the new saga of Hrómundur was certainly the most rewarding and easiest to demonstrate among my findings, other tangible results of my research are scattered across the pages of this book. These include establishing relationships among the texts of HsG, identifying scribes, narrowing down the often very broad dating of some manuscripts, and revealing the history of ownership and readership of the saga. Instead of attempting to draw broad overarching conclusions from this study or claiming their transformative potential for the state of scholarship on Old Norse-Icelandic literature, I have highlighted here some of the findings that seemed most intriguing to me and, hopefully, are also interesting to you, dear reader. My hope is that at least some of these findings will inspire further explorations into the transmission of Icelandic sagas, also, or especially, of those composed in the early modern period.

Text Editions

Editorial principles

The texts included in this edition are represented on a diplomatic level and follow the orthography of the base manuscripts as closely as possible, with only a few exceptions. The long s ‘f’ has been changed to ‘s’, and the ligature ‘B’ to ‘ss’. In 17HsG, the scribe of A601 uses the small capital ‘n’, ‘g’, and ‘r’, as well as an ‘l’ with a broken ascender to denote double consonants; in the edition, they are silently represented as ‘nn’, ‘gg’, ‘rr’, and ‘ll’. Ligatures such as ‘au’, ‘sk’, and ‘om’ are represented as separate letters and not indicated in any special way in the edition. The rounded r ‘z’, used mainly in A601, has been changed to ‘r’ and expanded as ‘ur’ when it appears as a superscript character. In 18HsG, the scribe of J634 does not seem to be very consistent in their use of ‘ij’, ‘ý’, and ‘y’, or ‘w’ and ‘v’. The edition attempts to represent these as reliably as possible, while recognising the limitations of this approach, which might lead to some inconsistencies. The same holds true for different forms of ‘ö’ (ó, ø, ö) in 19HsG, where the scribe of BL Add. 11109 (B11109) seems to be freely choosing between them. A similar case is with the diacritics appearing above ‘u’, which sometimes denote ‘ú’ and other times appear to simply distinguish ‘u’ from ‘n’. Finally, punctuation and capitalisation follow the base-text manuscript.

In the printed text, the editorial expansions are indicated in italics, regardless of whether they expand suspension, contraction, or special characters, such as the Tironian nota used for ‘og’ in A601 and J634, or the M-rune used to abbreviate ‘maður’ in A601. The expanded forms follow the written-out examples whenever possible; otherwise, they are an approximation based on the orthography of words with similar morphology. There are several cases of supplied characters when it is clear that a certain character has been omitted. The supplied text is always marked within insertion brackets ⟨*⟩. Unclear readings are marked with square brackets [*]. Additions are marked with insertion marks ^*^ and deletions with deletion marks {*}.

The variant apparatus includes both major and minor variants. This does not mean, however, that all these readings have text-critical value and were used to build the stemma of this tradition. The relationships among texts were established in the first place exclusively based on the major variants, while minor variants were taken into consideration only when relationships between closely related texts called for further analysis, such as A587 and A193. Minor variants in the apparatus are included to illustrate the scale of variation appearing in the tradition, but the main goal of the apparatus is to reliably represent exclusively the lexical variants. Generally, it ignores orthographic variants, but in some instances where the orthographic difference might carry some potentially interesting linguistic information, these variants are included, for example, the use of “of” for “um” in 19HsG. The list of such variants is subjective and cannot be considered exhaustive. The registered omissions are marked with ‘⋮’.

The main goal of the variant apparatus provided in this edition is to illustrate the relationships between the extant manuscripts by presenting their shared readings. It does not aim to present an exhaustive overview of all occurrences of minor variants in individual manuscripts. While there are multiple instances where individual readings of a single manuscript have been registered to give the reader an impression of the different types of variants introduced in individual manuscripts, they do not form an exhaustive list. This is especially true in the case of 19HsG, in which the extent of minor variation is very large and Lbs 679 4to (L679) frequently diverges from the remaining three manuscripts in terms of grammatical endings (case, number, and definit and indefinite forms of nouns and adjectives) as well as the use of function words. In the same way, I treat obvious minor scribal errors occurring in individual manuscripts, for example, when a nasal stroke is missing in one manuscript without obscuring the meaning of the word, this variation is not registered. The rationale for that is not only the economy of time and resources but also the assumption that these types of variation are of little use in determining relationships between texts

The lemmas in the variant apparatus are presented in the orthography of the base text with expansions of abbreviations marked in italics. With the exception of the eighteenth-century version, where the variants are from a single manuscript, the readings presented in the variant apparatus do not attempt to follow closely the orthography of each witness, and the abbreviations are expanded silently. The readings that are different only on the orthographic level are grouped together and represented in the approximated orthography, which follows that used in the first witness registered.

The digital editions are encoded according to the guidelines of the Text Encoding Initiative and use standard elements for the apparatus, as well as for unclear, deleted, and supplied passages or characters.<sup>70</sup>

1. In A601, there is a blank space left for a three-lines-tall initial, here supplied as the word-initial 's'.

2. A345, L222 and B4859 have a marginal note 'aliis Danmork', trimmed in L222 with only fina letters visible.

3. A marginal note in A601 refers to the underlined text about King Ólafur.

4. In A601, the M-rune is used to abbreviate maður.

5. In P67, 'austur' is corrected into 'vestur', most likely by a younger hand.

6. The word is abbreviated in A587, it could be expanded as sögðu or segja.

7. In A601, the abbreviation mark ‘er-curl’ usually stands for ‘er’ or ‘ir’, but here it is expanded as ‘ed’, following all the other manuscripts.

8. The colon in A601 is treated as an abbreviation mark, not punctuation.

9. In B4859, ‘Hraungvidr’ is corrected into ‘Hromundr’.

10. In A601, the scribe started to write ‘Hraungviður’, but corrected it.

11. A marginal note in A601 refers to the underlined sentence in lines 19 and 20.

12. A marginal note in A601 refers to the underlined text, ‘Svíþjóð’.

13. In A601 ‘austur’ is corrected to ‘vestur’.

14. A marginal note in A601 refers to the underlined name, ‘Máni’.

15. The scribe of A601 wrote ‘vissi’ with a long s ‘f’ followed by ‘þ’, here transcribed as three ‘s’s.

16. A601 has only one long ‘s’ followed by a colon, which would usually be expanded as ‘segir’ or ‘sagði’. All other manuscripts, however, preserve the reading ‘sagðist’, therefore it was chosen as an expansion here. It is expanded with the medio passive ‘z-ending’, which follows the orthography of A601.

17. A marginal note in A601 refers to the underlined name, ‘Práinn’. The word-initial ‘þ’ is enlarged and pen-flourish d.

18. A marginal note in A601 refers to the underlined name, ‘Valland’.

20. If the colon at the end of the word functions as an abbreviation, it could be expanded as ‘draugurinn’, the form without the article chosen to agree with the majority of the manuscripts.

21. In B4859, ‘sverd’ is added to replace ‘uapn’, which was initially written in this place.

22. The scribe wrote ‘öllu’ with an ‘au’-ligature followed by a single ‘l’, not by the ‘broken l’, which is usually used in this manuscript to denote doubling of the letter.

1. Even though the letter ‘ð’ is not common in J634, the ascender of the word-fina ‘d’ is crossed with a horizontal bar, making it look like an ‘ð’. It is worth to note here that the name is written in the antiqua script, which may suggest some relationship between the script type and the orthography; see also ‘Hraugviður’ further down on the same page.

2. In J634, this word appears to be written with a detached loop of ‘ð’ or a superfluou abbreviation mark for ‘gera’, if that’s the case, the abbreviation has been ignored here. L840 reads ‘giora’.

7. J634 has an abbreviation marker here, which is vaguely similar to that used for 'er', making the form 'nennir' a possibility.

8. J634 has here a regular r-superscript abbreviation, which usually is used for 'ar' and it would agree with L840, but it has been expanded as 'ur' to agree with the form of the following verb.

9. An unclear reading in L679: ‘vanga’ or ‘varga’.

10. In B11109, there is a colon, which can introduce direct speech, but there is no abbreviation mark to denote the abbreviation of the name. In this and similar cases, the colon is treated as an abbreviation mark.

11. The scribe of B11109 uses the same abbreviation mark for ‘eptir’ and ‘fer’, both expanded following the written-out forms from the manuscript.

12. The scribe’s ‘a’s and ‘o’s resemble each other closely in B11109, so it could be ‘af’ or ‘of’; the reading ‘of’ is more probable in this context.

VII kapítuli

Nú sem Hrómundr var at láta gripina í festina, tóc Þráinn til at mæla 50 oc segir stor hugaþr erto Hrómundr at grípa frá mér þat ec á, verþr ec nú at gjalda elli minnar, en þegar ec var úngr, hefþir þú ecki rænt mic sva stórom þegar ec vann allt Valland með fjölcíng oc góldrom, 55 oc marga Konga oc Kóngasyni lagþi ec at velli, en þegar á mic færþist alldurinn lést ec deya, var ec lifandi í þennan haug láttinn, oc síþan hef ec hér lifat vit sjón á gripom þessom sem þú hripsar frá mér, sem annar þjófr. Hrómundr mælir fl yr`a' verþr at vinna en gott þycir, oc sva fer mér, þycir sá laungom nockro nýtor || er vinna 112v til fæþis. Þá mælir Þráinn: haf þú ecki spott í frammi vit mic gamm-lann, þó at þú sért úngr á beinom, þá þori ec samt at `kalla þig þjóf at' gótsi míno. Þesso reiþdist Hrómundr oc ljóp at Þráinn, en hann tócr á móti af megni. Þá mælir Hrómundr nú þarf ecki fyrir at þre-ifast, oc má sér en þá nockot hússbóndinn. Já, segir Þráinn, þó at ec 10 sé orþinn gamall, þá scalto ecki, búo hundurinn þinn! bera fé frá mér oc ræna mic at gamni þíno, oc vel fer þat þú kaupir fullo, at þú hefr mic heimsóct, oc ómacat mic or sæti míno, oc víst scalto mega sjá vit mér daufom, þó at þú sért lifandi, oc til nockors vilda ec þér kjæmi fjöl i gullhrínga minna, sem þér með sverþi míno mest 15 í augo ganga. 21. An error in L1572, ‘órum’ probably fo ‘árum’, rather than ‘örum’. The scribe normally uses ‘ó’ for ‘ö’.

22. A grammatical error in B11109 and probably also in L2404. Note that the word is abbreviated in L2404 as ‘lipit’, while the abbreviations in L679 and L1572 are straightforward with a nasal stroke for ‘lidinn’.

VIII kapítuli

Einn dag var þat um vеторинн, at Kóngr befalaþi mónnom sínom, at fara meþ sér á jagt, at fanga veiþir fugla oc dýra; þeir gjóra sem Kóngr vildi, rípa merkr, oc skjóta fugla, en jaga dýr; þeim sóktist illa dýra jagtinn, því dýrinн voro allstygg. Hrómundr sigaþi racka sínom eptir dýrunum, en hann dró upp hvort eitt, oc um síþir fengo menn sva mórg til bráþs sem þá gyrti, oc héldo nú heim meþ storri skémtun oc fögnuþi, oc sógþo frá því, at Hrókr hefpi betst dregit upp dýrinн, oc eins hefpi hann fuglana sigraþ, lét þá Kóngr undir borþ setjast til matverþa oc dryckjo, oc voro allkátir en þegar hætt var dryckjo, gengjo menn til hvílo, oc tóco náþir. Þeir Vole oc Bíldr, hófpo gát á hundinom Hrók, oc þá ll menn voro sofandi, gengo þeir at hónom oc stúngo til bana, því hann lá sofandi oc var þreytr; hann spratt upp vit lagit oc náþi til Bílds, oc beit í gégnom handlegg hans, en Vole hjó af Hróci trinit. Vit þetta vaknaþi Hrómundr oc spyr hvæð um væri; hann setst upp oc sér hundinn daufan, en þeir Vole oc Bíldr

30. The expression ‘arma dubba’ is an off nsive term for women; examples in OH from the 17th and 18th cent. In Blöndal’s dictionary, dubba (Da. kvinde, laptaske) is illustrated with an example ‘sagði þær örmu dubbur [...] skyldu’, while elsewhere in the dictionary we can fin a similar expression: ‘þegi þú, þín arma gardranorn’, which is translated as ‘ti stille, din forbandede Heks’.

Kóng hún segir at hann sé nú í líps saman drætti, oc haldi snart burt til bardaga á móti þeim Svíom, eþa, segir hún, ætlar þú at fylgja Bróðr mínom í þessa ferd. Oggjörla veit ec þat, segir Hrómundr, en ómerkilegt er at sitja at gjörþalaus fyrir góða menn nær grannillar þeirra gjæta starfa sinna. Enga bón nenni ec at frammbera fyrir Kóng segir hún, at þú mátt sjálfráðr vera. Nockro eptir þetta, þegar Hrómundr tóc at verþa gróinn sára sinna, sképi þat: kerlíng tóc til at fá sva stóra geispa, at hún qvom varla framm orþi fyrir þeim; hún mælir einhvörstaþar er ec nú á orþi, oc man þat sannast vera, at slíkt megi henda sic; man nú Hálfdán Kóngr vera á tali vit Blindr vin sinn eptir venjo. Nú verþr frá því at segja at þetta sama qvöld qvom Blindr á tal vit Hálfdán Kóng oc mælir fréttir hafa fræpt mic um þat, hvap heitit hafi sá maþr, er vo Helga Frækna. Kóngr mælir hvap heitir hann? Blindr segir Hrómundr heitir hann, ættaþr or Noregi. Veitsto hvar hann er nú? segir Kóngr Hann er en á lífi segir Blindr hjá Hagali karli, hér á skógnom. Þá skalto fi na hann, oc láta hann ei undan sleppa, segir Kóngr oc manto menn til kalla, at leita hans á morgun. Sva skal gjört verþa segir Blindr en um morguninn eptir var Blindr snemma á fótum, oc heimtar xxx manna til sín, oc heldr til skógar; þeir qvoma þegar fyrst byrti. Blindr segir vilja ransókn uppi hafa, oc leita eptir þeim sem Helga vegit hafi, því Hálfdán Kóngr vilji sva vera láta. Hagall segir heimil skulo hús míni hvorjom manni, en þó er skyldast, at ec þeim betst leyfi sem frá Hálfdáni Kóngi qvoma, oc ecki vil ec vinna þat fyrir eins mans vinátto, at missa vinátto yckar Kóngs, oc skal yþr til reiþo ljós oc hvap annat, er vit þurfit. vetri, oc villdi ec, segir hann at þér, Herra!, vildot ráfa þá til gagns oc gamans. Kóngr segir vilja heyra. Blindr segir þat dreymdi mic fyrst, 5 at mér þókti qvoma einn stor oc hræþilegr hýþbjörn, hann óþ at yþr oc beit yþr mikla und á brjóstit. Kóngr segir híngat kémr annathvort Kóngr eþr annar kappi, sem vekr hér styrtjölp vit mic, en þar á eptir sættist hann oc ec. Blindr mælir annann draum dreymdi mic, segir 10 Blindr at ec þóktist qvoma í eitt stort oc vænt hús, þar sáto margir Fálkar á stóllom, voro þeir allir meþ fógrum fjóþ om, en sá fálkinn sem þér attot, hann var fjaþralau, oc allr rifi n af honom hamrinn.
Kóngr mælir þat verþr micill stormvindr, sem hristir oc skékur þat 15 hann á blæs, verþ ec þá staþdr nærrí eldi oc fjúk þá gneistarnir á mic. Þriþji draumorinn var þat, segir Blindr at ec þóktist sjá margt Sví renna hér at sunnan, þau rótóþo upp allri jörþunni um landit.

beit menn til bana, síþan át hann alla sem hann beit, síþarst át hann yþr oc mic. Kóngr mælir þat er þat, sem ec lengi hefi ætlat at láta vinna, at drepa hýþbjörn þann, sem hjorþom manna hefr opt mein gjört, oc er skammt frá koti Hagals. Enn dreymdi mic, segir Blíndr at úngr hóggormr var dreginn út or hóllinni, oc hangdi sverþ vit hans síþo, sem Mistilteinn hiet. Petta er allt drauma rugl, segir Kóngr, því Mistilteinn liggr í botninom á Vænir, oc þarf þic ecki þetta at skélfa; 35
eþa erto orþinn sú bleypa, at þú hyggr at allt mani teikna bardaga 128r menn, segja þeir, hvort heldr at hann fylgdi yþar mónnom, eþr þeim Svíom. Kóngr mælir sá þá enginn hvap þeir at hófpost. Þá svaraþi til maþr, oc sagþi þat hygg ec, segir hann, at Hrómundr mani lifa en nú, oc dvelja hjá Greipi en bræðr hans drap Helgi vit Vænirs vatn í vetr, oc er sú til géta, at Hrómundr mani hafa vegit Helga. Hvap man því valda, segir Kóngr at hann kémr ecki á fund vorn? Pat man því valda, segir þessi maþr, at hann vill ecki vitja yþar, at hann þurfti at forþa lífi síno seinast, þá hann flýþ héþan fyrir reiþi yþar, oc seinna man þat verþa, at hann híngat qvomi, fyrr en hann hefr hefnt síns vansa, sem hann þóktist fá hjá yþr, fyrir álygar Bílds oc Vola. Kóngr mælir Viljib þér láta Hrómund vera yþar herfylkinga yfirmann, eþr ei? ef þér þat viljib, þá skal eptir honom senda, oc sæmda boþ bjóþa. Menn qvápost ei vel vita, hvort hann villdi sættom taca, eþr ecki, því hann hefr þúnga lund oc þéttu.
